of Lennox and Addington will meet at the Council Chambers in the Court House, Napanee, on TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 24th
1914, at 2 o'clock p.m.

All accounts must be in the hands of the undersigned not later than Monday, November 23rd, in order that they may be considered.

W. G. WILSON,
County Clerk.

EXECUTOR'S NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

In the estate of Catherine Anderson, deceased.

Notice is hereby given pursuant to Chapter 121, of the Statutes of Ontario, 1914, Section 16 and Amending Acts, that all persons having any claims or demands against the estate of Catherine Anderson, late of the village of Newburgh, in the County of Lennox and Addington, widow, deceased, who died on or about the 27th day of October, A. D. 1914, are required to deliver or send by post prepaid to HERRINGTON, WARNER & GRANGE, Solicitors for the said Executor, all claims and demands, with full particulars of their claims or demands duly verified, and the nature of the security (if any) held by them.

And further take notice that after the said 10th day of December, A.D. 1914, the said executor may proceed to distribute the assets of the said estate amongst the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims or demands of which he shall then have received notice, and shall not be responsible for the said assets, or any part thereof so distributed, to any person or persons of whose claims or demands he shall not have received notice at the time of the distribution thereof.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Council Chamber

Nov. 16th, 1914.

Council met in regular session on Monday evening, Mayor Alexander in the chair.

Present—Reeve Denison and Councillors Walters, Wiseman, Waller, Carson, Dickinson.

The minutes of the last regular session were read and confirmed.

Mayor Alexander laid upon the table a writ which had been served upon him as Mayor of the town, by Mr. John Jennings. The plaintiff's claim is for $5,000 damages through the death of his daughter, who was drowned in the cistern in the fire hall, caused, so the plaintiff contends, by the negligence of the defendants, their servants, agents and workmen, and for the costs of the action. Messrs. Porter & Carnew, Belleville, are the solicitors for the plaintiff.

On motion of Councillors Waller and Wiseman, the writ was ordered placed in the hands of the town solicitor to take the necessary proceedings for defending the action.

G. B. Curran, secretary-treasurer of the Napanee Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association, asked the Council for the use of the town hall and Council Chamber on January 13th, 14th and 15th, 1915, for the purposes of their tenth annual poultry show. He also asked that the town's grant of $35.00 to the Association be paid as soon as convenient.

Request granted.
A communication was read from the Canadian Free Library for the blind, asking for financial assistance. The sum of $5.00 was granted.

A communication was read from Mr. Thos. Butcher, Simcoe street, complaining that the culvert crossing the road in front of his property needed cleaning.

Referred to the Streets Committee to have complaint attended to.

A communication from the Sawyer-Massey Co., was read calling the Council's attention to the fact that they had a note falling due on December 1st, and asked that preparation be made for payment of same.

On motion the treasurer will be instructed to make payment of the note when due.

A communication was read from Mr. Chas. Loucks, secretary of the Fire Brigade, asking the Council for the sum of $400.00, amount of their remuneration, and that the check be made payable to Capt. W. C. Vine.

On motion the amount of the firemen's salary was ordered placed on the pay roll.

Town Property Committee, reported, that as per instructions he had secured quotations for new seats for the town hall. Mr. Judson, the furniture dealer, has supplied the following prices: Chairs, in sections of 2, 3 and 4, at $1.65, $1.80, $1.90 and $2.05 each; another style of chair at $1.55 and $1.10, or the ordinary chair at 55c each.

The committee asked for and was given further time to report.

The Streets Committee were instructed to replace the crossing on Robert street leading to the resi-

NOVA SCOTIA'S GIFT ARRIVES IN HOLLAND

The Hague, Nov. 17.—The steamer Tremorvah, the first Belgian relief ship from the American continent, arrived to-day at Rotterdam. The Tremorvah sailed from Halifax October 28, carrying 3,500 tons of flour, potatoes, cheese and canned goods, the gift of the people of Nova Scotia and other parts of Canada.

As Nova Scotia is a British colony, these supplies are being handled through the American Commission at Rotterdam, which to-morrow will send a large quantity of flour to the city of Malines. Other supplies will follow shortly to the places where they are most needed.

For the benefit of other communities sending aid, the American Commissions state that the greatest need in northern Belgium, where the mills are in operation, is wheat.

London, Nov. 17.—A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph from Athens says:

"A launch from the United States cruiser Tennessee, which was entering the Gulf of Smyrna to arrange for the cruiser to come into the harbor, was fired upon by the forts and compelled to return to the Tennessee.

"The commander of the Tennessee informed the Vali that he had orders from his Government to enter the harbor of Smyrna, and had decided to do so."

Paris, Nov. 17.—An Athens despatch to the Havas Agency says:—"The American warship Tennessee has arrived at the port of Vurla, Asia Minor, and has put a stop to ill-treatment of British, French and Russian residents. The authorities of Smyrna, fearing a bombardment, have left for the interior.

WAR SUMMARY

Good news came Wednesday from the eastern arena. In a special call from Petrograd, a correspondent, who has heretofore proved a fairly reliable source of news, says the German advance into Poland from the direction of Thorn is being crushed by the Russians without abating their penetration into East Prussia farther eastward. He adds that Von Hindenburg, who seems still to be the chief commander of the eastern German armies, will continue to make the reinforcements he is receiving in the vicinity of Thorn, holding them there in readiness for a flank movement against the Russians should they persist in pressing on to the attack of central Germany through Silesia. In this he is believed to be following a plan of campaign worked out by the elder Von Moltke almost half a century ago.

The Russians, by continuing to sweep the army defending East Prussia to the north and west, which they are doing at a great cost in life, will arrive before long at the lower Vistula, and will then hold the line of that river from the Austrian frontier to the sea. It is possible that they will not attempt to push on in the centre, even if the German army based on Thorn is soundly beaten, till the menace from East Prussia is ended by the effective occupation of the entire province.

London, Nov. 18.—In South Africa General Louis Botha, Commander-in-Chief of the defence forces, reported the breaking up of additional reinforcements and the capture of great quantities of ammunition and provisions.

The Earl of Crewe disclosed in the House of Lords to-day that in East Africa the Indian troops are being employed against the Germans. There has been heavy fighting shown by the fact that the British casualties to date total 900.

Russians Have Laid Siege City From the North.

Italian Paper Declares That Cap of Galicia Is In Flames and That the Inhabitants Are In Flight. Reports at Petrograd Say Germans Have Taken Charge Have Ousted Austrian Defenders.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—The Giorn d'Italia of Rome publishes a despatch from Venice which says that news has been received there that Cracow, capital of Galicia, is burning and its inhabitants are fleeing. Cracow is invested on the north, and is expected to fall immediately.

From reports of Russian scout detachments which had ridden within a few miles of Cracow it appears Germans have taken command of forts and defences there, and have substituted German soldiers for Austrians in garrisoning the stronghold.

This step has caused further tensions between the Germans, Austrians, the latter being relegated to the defence of the Carpathians and not allowed any voice in direct the campaign.

All indications point to a rupture between the two armies.

Petrograd further reports that Russian campaign is developing favorably in East Prussia.

On the Polish frontier and in Galicia two enormous armies are meeting for a battle which may decide the fortunes of the war in the east.

The possibility is being discussed that the Austrians may abandon Cracow without defence rather than submit the city to a destructive bombardment.

The Russian advance in East Prussia, according to advices received from Petrograd from the front, is being assisted materially by cold weather which enables the troops to move more rapidly. In the swampy region of East Prussia movements of army have been retarded by roads. This condition has now been remedied by the cold weather, which has frozen the roads.

A fall of snow during the last few days is reported over the entire field of operations, but not to a sufficient extent to prove a serious obstacle to the movement of troops.

Fresh troops now being sent to front are supplied with short coats tanned sheepskin. Relief societies at Petrograd and other Russian cities are bending every effort to collect woollen garments.

Despatches to Petrograd papers indicate that the Germans are making slow progress along the line which extends from the River War across the Vistula to the southern frontier of East Prussia, fifty miles east of Thorn. The new front extends over a distance of three hundred miles from the Warthe to the extreme northeastern section of East Prussia.

The German right wing now appears to be feeling its way. The centre of the line is stubbornly resisting the determined advance of the Russians. The left wing is protected to some extent by the broken character of the country and by complicated artificial fortifications. In this respect the chief German reliance appears to be heavy artillery, since cavalry operations are almost impossible in such a country.

INDIANS BEAT TURKS.

New Arrivals at Fao Make Sortie and Capture Enemy's Camp.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—It is officially announced that since the occupation of Fao, at the head of the Persian Gulf, by a British Indian force, on Nov. 8, two actions have been fought with the Turkish forces, who "on both occasions have been severely handled and defeated after stubborn resistance."

The announcement continues: "The first of these attacks occurred early in the morning of Nov. 11, when the Turks made a determined attack on the British outposts. On the fourteenth further reinforcements arrived from India, and the following day the Indians, commanded by Gen. Delamain, sortied and attacked the Turks, occupying a post about four miles distant, assisted by the sloops Esplegle and Odin."

"The enemy's camp was captured and many prisoners and guns were taken. The British casualties were two officers wounded and eight men killed and fifty-one wounded."

Search For Survivors Fails.

VALPARAISO, Chile, Nov. 17.—The Chilean hospital ship Valdivia, which has been searching the seas for possible survivors of the British cruisers lost in the engagement with the German squadron off the Chilean coast on Nov. 1, arrived yesterday at Talcahuana and reports her search entirely without success. She found nothing in the way of wreckage or boats from the British vessels. The Chilean Admiralty announces that its search is now over.

"The Germans are concentrating great armies at Thorn, Posen and Breslau and plan to fight desperately to prevent the Russian occupation of the important parts of Silesia and Posen. Only the utmost need will persuade the Germans to send any troops back to the western front at present."

A word of caution to the allies comes from Petrograd. This is that they must not expect the Russians to sweep on to Berlin over night, as it were, as this may take months and even longer. The Germans occupy the defences they have been preparing for years, and in addition to this they may be able to spare even more men for the operation on their eastern front.

DIRIGIBLE CRIPPLED.

German Airship Reached Frontier and Then Collapsed.

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 17. — (Via London).—The Telegraaf learns from Maestricht, Holland, that Sunday a badly damaged dirigible airship flew over Limburg, Holland, coming from the direction of Belgium. It was evident that the airship had been damaged, either by artillery fire or a storm. When over Maestricht the airship disappeared in the direction of Germany.

Another dirigible was observed on Sunday from Sittard, 13 miles north east of Maestricht, coming from the southeast and flying in a northerly direction along the Holland frontier.

Collapsed at Frontier.

LONDON, Nov. 17. — The correspondent of The Evening News at Rotterdam says of the Zeppelin airship reported in distress near Maestricht, Holland, Sunday:

"The airship was badly damaged in the rear, but by desperate efforts managed to reach the German frontier, where it collapsed a total wreck."

JAPAN ACCUSES U. S.

Who Sent Message From Manila to Emden, She Asks.

TOKIO, Nov. 17.—The first allegation that the United States has failed to live up to the standard of neutrality it set, is made in a despatch received from Kobe yesterday.

It declares that the German cruiser Emden was enabled to find and sink the steamer Troylus as the result of a wireless despatch sent from Manila.

The information contained in the wireless message, it is declared, was secured in Kobe by a German merchant who has been arrested and will be tried as a spy.

BATTLE MOVES SOUTH

Main German Attack Yesterday Occurred in Argonne.

French Repulse Onslaught on Their Positions and Also Frustrate the Kaiser's Assault on Town of St. Hubert—Big Force of Germans Are Cut Off by Flood South of Dixmude—Fresh Indians Arrive.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—The Germans yesterday made a fierce onslaught against the French positions in the forest of Argonne, the attack being met with an unflinching resistance, followed shortly after by a vigorous offensive movement, which forced the Germans to retire. The Kaiser's troops made an attack on the Town of St. Hubert, but were repulsed.

A semi-official explanation of the French position in the forest of Argonne was given out in Paris yesterday afternoon. It said:

"The fighting line has not changed perceptibly in the last two months. The French and German trenches are separated at some points by a distance not exceeding fifty yards. Infantry fire is constantly going on, while all the experience of siege operations are being utilized. This siege resembles greatly that of Sebastopol. Daily engagements occur, resulting sometimes in bending either the French or the German lines back for a distance of 150 yards.

"The casualties have been very heavy for both opposing armies, but here, as elsewhere, the German losses certainly have been superior to those of the French."

This explanation was brought forth by the publication in the German press of a statement to the effect that the French had been completely driven out of the Argonne, while the siege of Verdun was proceeding. Regarding the latter, it is declared that the French are advancing and that they are now from five to ten kilometres (three to six miles) further forward than they were a month ago.

The loss of life in Flanders has been appalling, with the effect that the German offensive in the extreme west has shifted southward toward the French border. Snow and rain have fallen over the battleground in West Flanders until the roads have been turned into channels of mud, where heavy fighting and artillery movements are impossible, and where a big force of Germans is said to have been cut off by a flood. The region from Dixmude to Nieuport is a lapping swamp. Men have been driven out of the trenches, wherein now float the ghastly, mutilated bodies of the dead. Guns and ammunition wagons have been abandoned, and there is recorded thereabouts an increase of sickness, especially lung and throat affection.

Notwithstanding these harrowing conditions, the Germans are pressing, with almost non-human determination, their attempt to jam through to Dunkirk and Calais. An artillery duel is now said to be in progress. The Germans have now completed several new lines of defence through Belgium.

Japanese gunners, skilled in the use of the heaviest types of cannon, are on their way to France to aid the artillerymen of the allies.

Twenty-five thousand fresh Indian troops arrived in Paris yesterday from Marseilles, and started immediately for the front. They reached Marseilles Thursday, after a twenty-three-day voyage from Bombay.

The National Swiss yesterday published a long letter from a Swiss who is doing Red Cross work at Brussels.

YOUTHS MARCH TO DEATH.

British Bulletin Pays Tribute to Heroism of German Levies.

LONDON, Nov. 17. — The official press bureau has issued an account, dated Nov. 10, of the movements of the British force and the French armies in immediate touch with it. After giving in detail the events from day to day, it continues:

"In describing the operations for the six days from Nov. 4 to 9, it can be said that during that period the Germans have nowhere along our front, made an attack in great force, such as was launched against Ypres at the end of October. What they may be contemplating remains to be seen. Their policy has appeared to be to wear us out by continual bombardment, interspersed with local assaults at different points.

"On the whole there is evidence to show that the Germans are beginning to be affected by their heavy losses. From prisoners it is gathered that the young men of the new corps cannot withstand the fatigues and privations of campaigning, and that the middle-aged men lack ardor. From the same source also, it is learned that the recruits who have not previously served, have only received some eight or nine weeks' training instead of the 12 weeks' course prescribed for them; that they have had practically no instruction in musketry, and that they have not practiced entrenching.

"Whatever deterioration there may be in the material now being drafted into the ranks of our enemy, it must be admitted that the Prussian war machine, acting on a nation previously inured to the sternest discipline, has obtained the most remark-

LONDON, Nov. 17. — The correspondent of The Evening News at Amsterdam says of the Zeppelin airship reported in distress near Maestricht, Holland, Sunday:

"The airship was badly damaged in the rear, but by desperate efforts managed to reach the German frontier, where it collapsed a total wreck."

no Sent Message From Manila to Emden, She Asks.

TOKIO, Nov. 17.—The first allegation that the United States has failed to live up to the standard of neutrality it set, is made in a despatch received from Kobe yesterday.

It declares that the German cruiser Emden was enabled to find and sink the steamer Troylus as the result of a wireless despatch sent from Manila.

The information contained in the wireless message, it is declared, was secured in Kobe by a German merchant who has been arrested and will be tried as a spy.

to their attempt to sail through to Dunkirk and Calais. An artillery duel is now said to be in progress. The Germans have now completed several new lines of defence through Belgium.

Japanese gunners, skilled in the use of the heaviest types of cannon, are on their way to France to aid the artillerymen of the allies.

Twenty-five thousand fresh Indian troops arrived in Paris yesterday from Marseilles, and started immediately for the front: They reached Marseilles Thursday, after a twenty-three-day voyage from Bombay.

The National Swiss yesterday published a long letter from a Swiss who is doing Red Cross work at Brussels. An extract from the letter says: "The number of German wounded arriving here is unimaginable. Trains—which we call cemetery trains—full of piled-up dead soldiers continue to arrive from the front. They contain bundles of dead; that is, four bodies tied together to facilitate transportation."

"The bodies are burned promptly in special furnaces erected just outside Brussels."

An observer with the British army who furnishes the newspaper reports from the front announces that the German attempts to batter a wedge through the British lines have greatly decreased in force during the past few days and that they bear little semblance to the attacks in great force launched against Ypres at the end of October. They are, he adds, more in the nature of demonstrations in force than serious assaults.

The writer pays high tribute to the bravery of raw German youths and untrained men of middle age who, he says, does not hesitate to march against the trained British troops.

If the Germans have abandoned their repeated furious battering ram efforts, their failure to thrust back the allies' lines and reach Calais will, from the allies' point of view, constitute a distinct victory for the allies, since, it is asserted, they have not tried nor were they expected to accomplish anything more than to hold their own on the defensive.

Officers May Be Interned.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—Telegraphing from Christiania, the correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co. says that the British steamer Weymar, on her way from Archangel, Russia, to Leith, Scotland, ran ashore on Borre Island, off the coast of Norway. All hands were saved and taken to Torshojem. Among them are 20 British officers who recently brought over a Canadian icebreaker for the Russian Government.

The question is now being raised as to whether these officers are to be interned.

Letters Must Go By Post.

LONDON, Nov. 17. — An Amsterdam despatch to Reuter's Telegram Co. states that a German official communication announces that the general commander of the seventh army corps at Munster, Westphalia, has issued an order prohibiting the transport to Holland, and vice versa, of letters or other written communications other than through the post.

withstand the fatigues and privations of campaigning, and that the middle-aged men lack ardor. From the same source also, it is learned that the recruits who have not previously served, have only received some eight or nine weeks' training instead of the 12 weeks' course prescribed for them; that they have had practically no instruction in musketry, and that they have not practiced entrenching.

"Whatever deterioration there may be in the material now being drafted into the ranks of our enemy, it must be admitted that the Prussian war machine, acting on a nation previously inured to the sternest discipline, has obtained the most remarkable results.

"It is true that a considerable proportion of the masses recently thrown into the field against the British has consisted of hastily trained and immature men, but the great factor remains that these ill-assorted levies have not hesitated to advance against highly trained troops. In spite of lack of officers, in spite of inexperience, boys of 16 and 17 have faced our guns, have marched steadily up to the muzzles of our rifles and have met death in droves, without flinching."

TERRITORY SUBMERGED.

Fighting Around Dixmude Limited to Artillery Duels.

PARIS, Nov. 17.—The night bulletin issued by the War Office said:—

"The situation is without modification."

The afternoon bulletin was as follows:—

"During all of yesterday on the Yser Canal, from Nieupoort to the point on the river opposite Dixmude, the fighting was limited to artillery exchanges, the country having been further inundated. The submerged territory now stretches to the south of Dixmude to a point five kilometres to the north of Bixchoote.

"The forces of the enemy which endeavored to cross the canal in the region between Dixmude and Bixchoote all were driven back beyond the bridges. A German regiment was completely destroyed at a point to the south of Bixchoote."

"At the southeast of Ypres two other German attacks were repulsed."

"On our part we have taken the offensive and reconquered certain points of support which the enemy some days ago succeeded in capturing."

"For the last few days, between the River Lys and the River Oise, there have been only small minor operations by small units, and we have made slight progress in our works of approach."

"In the region on the River Aisne, in the district of Champagne, only cannonades, without result, have occurred. In the Argonne district the Germans have made another attack upon St. Hubert without success."

"In the region of St. Mihiel the enemy has failed in a surprise attack in the forest of Apremont, and the Vosges there is little activity."

Detachment of Britons Turned Defeat Into Victory.

PARIS, Nov. 17.—A remarkable incident is narrated by a correspondent of Liberte yesterday. He says that during the desperate fighting to the south of Ypres on Nov. 11 a British infantry detachment of 80 men found itself isolated and unable to join its main body and took refuge for the night in a wood. The position seemed hopeless, but the men rested till dawn. They were then aroused by a fusillade near at hand, and found that a German column was being driven toward the wood by a force of allies. Holding their fire they waited till the Germans were near and then charged with fixed bayonets. The diversion was so decisive that 400 prisoners were taken and the lost Tommies received a doubly warm welcome from their comrades.

SIR WILFRED LAURIER SEVENTY-THREE YEARS YOUNG

Greatest Canadian Celebrates Another Birthday in Harness---With Health and Vigor Unimpaired, Receives the World's Congratulations---A Sketch of the Personality and Life Work of the Old Chief.

As a matter of fact it is her right and her duty to enjoy perfect health and strength—to be just as strong and healthy as man—perhaps more so—in view of

Province of Quebec. Those misgivings were speedily allayed. The wisdom of the choice was vindicated from the first and for the ensuing twenty-seven years it has been unquestioned. As leader of the party he issued the call for the Dominion Liberal Convention which met at Ottawa in 1893 and laid down the fundamental principles of Liberal policy on which the Liberal victory of June 23rd, 1896, was won. On July 13th, 1896, Premier Laurier formed the "Ministry of all the talents."

THE LAURIER ADMINISTRATION.

With that Government was inaugurated a new era of Canadian prosperity and development. Of the fifteen years of the Laurier administration little need be said here. A new Canada came into being. National trade and prosperity grew steadily as never before. Immigration increased tenfold. National revenues outgrew national expenditures and the per capita debt went steadily down. National unity and harmony among the various elements of the Canadian population found expression in a new national pride and a new national spirit. The British Preference, granted first in 1897 and increased in 1900, created and developed a new Imperial sentiment based on mutual advantage and mutual good-will. The construction of the National Transcontinental Railway, built practically out of Liberal surpluses, rolled back the map of Canada 400 miles. And with the growth of the national self-consciousness and pride, there was a corresponding growth of Imperial patriotism, based on local autonomy with common co-operation, common needs and common aspirations for the security, welfare and unity of the whole Empire. As the London Times has expressed it; "Sir Wilfrid Laurier the French Roman Catholic Premier of a self-governing federation, in which British Protestants are in the majority, has expressed more freely and more truly than any statesman who has spoken yet, the temper of the new Imperial patriotism fostered into self-consciousness by the South African War."

These are but a few of the outstanding achievements of the Laurier administration. Behind every influence and result of that administration was the controlling and guiding hand of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. None will accord more willing assent of that statement than his late Cabinet colleagues and his followers in Parliament who knew best the difficulties he had to surmount, the divergent influences he had to reconcile, the tactful generalship he had to exercise and the firm and far-sighted leadership he always had to exert.

VINDICATION AFTER DEFEAT.

His Government was defeated on September 21st, 1911, on an issue of Sir Wilfrid's own choosing—an issue to which Liberals and Conservatives were alike pledged when he came into power and an issue firm-based on the fundamentals of Liberal policy and on democratic principles of economic justice and equal freedom to all classes of the community in matters of trade as in matters of education, religion and responsible government. Of the "unholy alliance," of the sectional and creedal misrepresentations exploited against him, of the organized influence of wealth and the Big Interests which combined to bring about that defeat, and of the moral of the political and economic conditions of the country during the past three years, the people of Canada are now fairly well seized. Vindication of the character and aims and record of a statesman never followed a defeat more quickly.

prices one way to the producer and another way to the consumer." He believes that responsible government is the foundation stone of democratic institutions; that militarism has no place in modern democracy and that arbitration between capital and labor and between nation and nation is the hope of civilization and a practical ideal of Government. He believes that Great Britain in the present world conflict is now battling for that ideal and his practical loyalty to British institutions and to all that the British flag stands for has been shown in the whole-hearted manner in which he has assisted the Government in the present crisis and has assisted the recruiting movement by personal appeal in his own Province. Some of his opponents may have attempted to play politics with a national crisis and may have sought an election appeal this Autumn, relying for victory on a wave of patriotic sentiment. Sir Wilfrid has called a truce to party politics and has resolutely refused even to criticize a single act of the Government since the war broke out. His Imperialism is summed up in his declaration, "I believe the best British subject is the best Canadian." Our duties as British subjects, he has always maintained, must ever go hand in hand with our rights as Canadians. That gives the keynote to his attitude on the naval question and on the whole question of Imperial co-operation in

SIR WILFRED LAURIER.

Ottawa, November 20th, 1914.

Seventy-three years ago to-day at St. Lin, a Quebec hamlet nestling in the shelter of the Laurentians, there was born to Carolus Laurier and his wife, Marcelle Martineau, a son, Wilfrid Laurier. Probably there is no one now living in the village who remembers the event. Probably no one at the time ever imagined that across the span of three score and ten years the steadily growing personality and influence of the obscure land-surveyor's son would dominate Canadian political development as no other personality has ever done in the life of the Dominion.

To-day Sir Wilfrid Laurier stands recognized throughout the world as the greatest of all Canadians, as the most conspicuous statesman in Greater Britain. For nearly half a century he has stood unsullied an unshamed in the fiercest light of party politics, a pride to all Canadians. After forty years continuous membership in the House of Commons, after twenty-six years as leader of the Liberal party, over fifteen of which was spent as Prime Minister of his country, he is still erect of bearing, there is still the wonted fire in his words, still the same keen, virile and undisputed leadership. He stands to-day the most dominant personality, as well as the most picturesque and most influential figure in the Dominion. To-day, from all parts of Canada, from Great Britain, from all the overseas Dominions, from scores of his devoted personal friends, from his political supporters and from his political opponents, came a flood of congratulatory messages, coupled with the prayer that he may long be spared to the public service of the country and Empire. And with health and strength, still apparently unimpaired with the passage of the years, with the eye undimmed, with the hand still steady, with courage, faith and optimism undiminished, there is every indication that this hope will be realized. As long as his strength remains, Sir Wilfrid will carry the burden of leadership which his party has imposed upon him, both in victory and defeat. "Whether it be twenty years or ten or five," he said to his followers in the Commons last May, "whatever may be the length of my time is in the hands of God; but so long as God spares me, I shall continue to give my best, however poor that may be, to the service of those principles which we all hold so dear."

THE BOY AND THE YOUNG MAN.

Sir Wilfrid's mother died when he was but six years old. His father sent the young lad to be educated at a school in a neighboring Scotch settlement, where he boarded for a time with store-keeper Murray, a good Scotch Presbyterian. There the coming Premier of Canada first learned the English language and religious tolerance, two endowments which have helped to give the man of French descent and Roman Catholic faith, the grace and facility of expression and the breadth of vision irresistibly appealing alike to both the great races in Canada, English and French, Catholic and Protestant.

For seven years he attended L'Assomption College, where at the age of sixteen he was recognized as the leader of his class with a brilliant career predicted for him. In 1860, he began the study of law as a student at McGill. Four years afterwards he was graduated with honors, and gave the valedictory of his class. In that valedictory—his first recorded public utterance—he gave expression to the essential principles which have animated his whole public career, "The work of the maker and of the student of law," he said, "is to cause justice to reign."

Immediately after graduation, the young lawyer began to take an active interest in public questions, joining a group of progressive young French-Canadians, assisting in the editing of a weekly paper and taking part in debates on public questions of the moment. The young barrister went to Arthabaskaville to practise his profession. In 1868, he married Miss Zoe Lafontaine, of Montreal, in whom he has found, during all the succeeding years, a true and loyal helpmate. Their married life, though unblest with children, has been an ideally happy one. In 1871, he was elected to the Quebec Legislative Assembly for Drummond and Arthabasca by a majority of over one thousand. At Quebec, he made an immediate impression. Three years later came promotion to the Federal arena. He was elected to the Commons in 1874, and seconded the address in reply to the speech from the throne at the opening of the new Parliament. The Commons of that day at once recognized that a new star had arisen on the horizon. In October, 1877, he was called to the Government in the Mackenzie Administration, and was sworn in as Minister of Inland Revenue. Thus for thirty-seven years Sir Wilfrid has been a member of the King's Privy Council. In 1878, he was returned to the Commons for Quebec East, and since then he has continuously represented that riding in the House.

LIBERAL LEADER FOR THIRTY-SEVEN YEARS.

In 1887, sixteen years after entering Parliament, he was chosen leader of the Liberal party when Hon. Edward Blake laid down the mantle and recommended the brilliant young lieutenant from Quebec as his successor. The new leader took up the burden with diffidence and perhaps with some misgivings on the part of many Liberals as to the wisdom of choosing a party leader from the unholy alliance," of the sectional and creedal misrepresentations exploited against him, of the organized influence of wealth and the Big Interests which combined to bring about that defeat, and of the moral of the political and economic conditions of the country during the past three years, the people of Canada are now fairly well seized. Vindication of the character and aims and record of a statesman never followed a defeat more quickly.

IN OFFICE OR OUT, THE GREATEST CANADIAN.

It is no vain boast of Liberals to say that Sir Wilfrid Laurier never stood higher in the estimation of his country, and never possessed the confidence of all to a greater extent than he does to-day. The quivers of party antagonism have emptied all their shafts against him. Time has but proven the high sincerity of his purpose, the consistency of his political principles, the integrity of his public and private life, the far-sighted vision of his statesmanship, the democracy of his Liberalism, the courage and faith of his Canadianism and the sanity of his Imperialism. In office or out of it, he is still "the greatest Canadian," increasingly beloved of his political friends and increasingly respected by his opponents.

THE ELIXIR OF YOUTH.

At seventy-three he is still "the greatest fighter of them all." Forty years of strenuous public life have brought no slackening in the vigor of mind or energy, nor any discouragement as to the ultimate triumph of the principles for which he has stood. There is an elixir of perpetual youth in a good cause and in a good fight. The elixir is in the veins of the "Old Chief" who is to-day leading his party with all his old-time courage and inspiration. "I have endeavored to meet success without elation, and reverse without discouragement," he said to his followers in Parliament last May in acknowledging their testimonial to him on the completion of forty years of continuous membership in the Commons. The Father of Parliament, in point of length of service as in point of ripe judgment, oratorical graces and public experience, he is still, in Opposition as in Power, an optimist and an unflagging worker. During the fifteen years of his Premiership, Sir Wilfrid, with the exception of his Imperial Conference trips and his western tour of 1910, and during election campaigns, was never away from his post at the Capital for more than a week at most in any one year. As the leader of His Majesty's loyal opposition he is now daily in his office attending to a large correspondence, looking after the details of party organization, receiving many callers who seek his advice or assistance, and keeping abreast through books and periodicals of all national problems and world movements.

THE MAN AND HIS POLICIES.

For nearly half a century Sir Wilfrid has fought the battles of Canadian democracy—for responsible government, for social justice, for equality of opportunity, for freedom for the common people in the age-long fight between entrenched and aggressive self-interest and altruistic common interest. "The happiness of the masses of the people is the underlying consideration of Government," he said to the students of the University of Toronto last December. And in the policies he now advocates there is proof of his sincere belief in the ideal of Government he thus stated. He is leading the fight for tariff revision downwards so that greedy men may be prevented from taking undue tolls from their fellow men, so that combines and corporations may be curbed when they attempt "to fix national crisis and may have even an election appeal this Autumn, rearing for victory on a wave of patriotic sentiment. Sir Wilfrid has called truce to party politics and has resolutely refused even to criticise single act of the Government since the war broke out. His Imperialism is summed up in his declaration, believe the best British subject is the best Canadian." Our duties as British subjects, he has always maintained, must ever go hand in hand with our rights as Canadians. That gives the keynote to his attitude on the naval question and on the whole question of Imperial co-operation, matters of trade and defence. The moral and the vindication of the stand, as embodying the true basis of permanent Imperial unity and ending loyalty, are shown in the who hearted response from every self-governing Dominion to the Motherland call for help in the present crisis.

COME FIGHT WITH ME.

The appeal of his whole life, the chivalry of his nature, the poet and imagination of his eloquence, the courage and the faith of high purpose make him to-day at seventy-three years of age, an exemplar a leader for every young Canadian. At seventy-three he is more than every young Canadian, in hope, in outlook and in enthusiasm for service for the common weal. "Fight on, I call to you to fight the battle of public service," was his message last December to the young Liberals of Ontario gathered at Hamilton. "Stand by your ideals. Liberalism must turn with the same unvariable courage the new problems of social reconstruction and social progress as our fathers applied to the large and preying problems of constitutional form."

And to the students of Toronto last December the Canadian Gladstone gave his magnificent clarion call to service. "My young friends go out into the world to service. Make the highest thought of service your inspiration. Problems there are—problems. To-morrow, the day after tomorrow, it will be your turn to grapple with them. Serve God as your country. Be firm in the right as God gives you to see the right. You may not always succeed. Progress is often punctuated with reverses. You may meet reverse—the following day stand up again; renew the conflict; for truth and justice shall triumph in the end."

A Doleful Mood.

The proprietor of a Paris cafe noticed that after he had refused to give his pianist an increase of salary the number of his customers dwindled rapidly. It was only when all but one diner had deserted him that he discovered that the pianist had been inflicting Chopin's "Funeral March" on the audience nightly. The pianist who was proceeded against in the law courts and was fined 5 francs pleaded that he played according to the mood he felt in after his request had been refused.

Of Course She Would.

When the train made its first start after leaving home, Mr. Simpkins who had been in a brown study for several minutes, raised his eye which had a troubled look in it and remarked, "My dear, are you sure we haven't forgotten anything?" "Of course we haven't," responded the good lady cheerfully, "we would have thought of it the minute the train started."

BURIED TREASURE.

Story Which the Natives of Peru Have Handed Down.

There has always been fascination for man in lost or sunken treasure, and this again has been brought home to us by the many attempts which have been made lately to recover from the ocean bed bullion which has laid there for centuries, and in some cases a few weeks only.

The sinking of the Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence River has added to the number of ships which have taken to their grave beneath the icy waters valuables which are essential to the works of man.

Divers are now endeavoring to recover the bullion aboard the Canadian liner, for there are men still willing to risk their lives in the recovery of treasure from wrecks, as in the old days men were ever ready to go into unexplored lands in search of riches reported to be buried there.

The treasure of the Incas of Peru is among many that have defied the efforts of expeditions to locate, and even to this day no definite clue has been found of the many million dollars worth of gold buried on the approach of the Spaniards into the interior of the present republic.

One of the stories of these lost treasures relates to a Cuzco white man of Spanish descent whom the

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Nov. 16.—The wheat market opened 1/4c higher on all months except July. Oats for December were 1/4c lower and flax 2 1/2c higher for November and 1 1/2c higher for May.

Trading was quiet in options, a light volume of business being transacted. The demand for all grades of cash wheat was brisk, and spreads have narrowed up considerably in the last two days. No. 1 northern wheat being now 1/4c over November option. Exporters were keen buyers of nearby stuff to fill space.

About noon prices for wheat were 1/4c to 1/2c higher. Flax was easier, except for December, which was holding steady. The large increase of about five and a half million bushels wheat in the United States visible supply caused a decided weakness on the close, and wheat finished 1/4c to 3/4c lower, oats 1/4c to 1/2c lower; flax closed very weak, following a steady market, being 1 1/2c to 2 1/2c lower.

Inspections for two days were 802 cars, as against 2319 last year, and in sight were 600.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Nov. 16.—Business in grain today after the cable was very quiet. There was a fair demand from local buyers for oats, but the trade with outside points is very quiet. There was a better demand for Argentine corn, and sales of several carloads were made at 83 1/2c per bushel, ex-store. Another shipment of 100,000 bushels of this corn is expected to arrive here this week. Flour was unchanged, with demand quiet. Millfeed continues active and firm. Demand for butter quiet and easy, finest creamery at auction today selling at 27c.

Cheese quiet. Exports for the week, 31,373, against 37,304 for the same week last year. Eggs strong. Exports for week, 15,774 cases, as compared with 13,809 for the like week last year. Dressed hogs stronger and 25c per cwt. higher.

WOMAN WEAK AND NERVOUS

Finds Health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Creston, Iowa.—"I suffered with female troubles from the time I came into womanhood until I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I would have pains if I overworked or lifted anything heavy, and I would be so weak and nervous and in so much misery that I would be prostrated. A friend told me what your medicine had done for her and I tried it. It made me strong and healthy and our home is now happy with a baby boy. I am very glad that I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and do all I can to recommend it."—Mrs. A. B. BOSCAMP, 504 E. Howard Street, Creston, Iowa.

Tons of Roots and Herbs are used annually in the manufacture of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is known from ocean to ocean as the standard remedy for female ills.

For forty years this famous root and herb medicine has been pre-eminently successful in controlling the diseases of women. Merit alone could have stood this test of time.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

POISON PARADOX.

Deadly Substances Whose Action Is a Puzzle to Science.

The more you dilute certain poisons with water the more deadly they become. This remarkable fact has been demonstrated by Dr. F. Roux, the well known French scientist.

The poisons used in the tests were principally of the bacterial variety, but there seems to be no reason to believe that the proposition is not equally true of other poisons.

Some of the bacterial poisons experimented with became doubly virile when diluted with 100 times their volume of distilled water. When less water was used the poison proved less harmful and when they were diluted to an even greater extent their poisonous action increased. The conclusion was compelled that the greater the dilution the more dangerous the poisons became, and the only explanation offered was that the resistance of the blood stream was diminished by the water.

This is not the only paradox connected with the action of poisons that has come under investigation at the hands of scientists recently. The venom of the cobra, the most dangerous of all Indian serpents, has always proved more or less of a mystery in view of the fact that if the poison glands are cut out of a newly killed snake of this species their contents may be swallowed with im-appeal to pay money on a national crisis and may have sought an election appeal this Autumn, relying for victory on a wave of patriotic sentiment. Sir Wilfrid has called a ruse to party politics and has absolutely refused even to criticise a single act of the Government since he was broke out. His Imperialism summed up in his declaration, "I believe the best British subject is the best Canadian." Our duties as British subjects, he has always maintained, must ever go hand in hand with our rights as Canadians. That gives the keynote to his attitude on the avowed question and on the whole question of Imperial co-operation in matters of trade and defence. The moral and the vindication of that stand, as embodying the true basis of permanent Imperial unity and enduring loyalty, are shown in the wholehearted response from every self-governing Dominion to the Motherland's call for help in the present crisis.

COME FIGHT WITH ME.

The appeal of his whole life, the rivalry of his nature, the poetry and imagination of his eloquence, the courage and the faith of high purpose make him to-day at seventy-three years of age, an exemplar and leader for every young Canadian. At twenty-three he is more than ever a young Canadian, in hope, in outlook, and in enthusiasm for service for the common weal. "Fight on, I call upon you to fight the battle of public service," was his message last December to the young Liberals of Ontario gathered at Hamilton. "Stand to our ideals. Liberalism must turn into the same unvariable courage to meet new problems of social reconstruction and social progress as our fathers applied to the large and pressing problems of constitutional reform."

And to the students of Toronto last December the Canadian Gladstone gave his magnificent clarion call to service, "My young friends go out to the world to service. Make the highest thought of service your inspiration. Problems there are—big problems. To-morrow, the day after to-morrow, it will be your turn to grapple with them. Serve God and our country. Be firm in the right; God gives you to see the right; you may not always succeed. Progress is often punctuated with reverses. You may meet reverse—but following day stand up again and new the conflict; for truth and justice shall triumph in the end."

A Doleful Mood.

The proprietor of a Paris cafe noticed that after he had refused to give his pianist an increase of salary the number of his customers dwindled rapidly. It was only when all but one diner had deserted him that he discovered that the pianist had been inflicting Chopin's "Funeral March" on the audience nightly. The pianist, who was proceeded against in the law courts and was fined 5 francs, pleaded that he played according to the mood he felt in after his request had been refused.

Of Course She Would.

When the train made its first stop after leaving home, Mr. Simpkins, who had been in a brown study for several minutes, raised his eyes, which had a troubled look in them, and remarked, "My dear, are you sure we haven't forgotten anything?" "Of course we haven't," responded the good lady cheerfully. "I could have thought of it the minute the train started."

liner liner, there are men willing to risk their lives in the recovery of treasure from wrecks, as in the old days men were ever ready to go into unexplored lands in search of riches reported to be buried there.

The treasure of the Incas of Peru is among many that have defied the efforts of expeditions to locate, and even to this day no definite clue has been found of the many million dollars worth of gold buried on the approach of the Spaniards into the interior of the present republic.

One of the stories of these lost treasures relates to a Cuzco white man of Spanish descent whom the Lord blessed with numerous children. It is the custom here that a godfather shall look after and provide for his godchild; and so, as this man was poor, he tried to add to his resources by getting a corps of good godfathers.

So as the infants came one after another he named each in honor of one of the distinguished citizens of the town. The citizens, however, did not respond and the man grew poorer and poorer. At last he had nine babies, each of whom had been given a rich godfather, but there was no help forthcoming. The father swore that he would leave the rich and choose as the patron of his next child the first man he met on the street after its birth.

In due time the stork came again, and the man, rushing out, saw a poor Indian driving a caravan of llamas into the town. He stopped him and told him he wanted him to be godfather to his child.

The Indian objected, saying that he was poor and not fit to be godfather to a white child. The man then told of his vow and finally persuaded the Indian to accept the position.

In due time the baby was baptized and the Indian appeared at the ceremony as its godfather. He kissed his godson as he left the church and the next day came back into Cuzco with a score of llamas, loaded with wood. He took this wood to the father of his godchild, saying that he had brought what he could and that he must accept the wood as a gift.

The man was thanked and the wood was duly stored away in the court of the house. Some time after that the bundles of sticks and roots were opened, and inside of each was found a great bag of gold in nuggets and dust. In the meantime the Indian had disappeared and could not be found.

The man took the gold and built two large houses on the street called Triumph. If you do not believe this story come to Cuzco, and the people will show you the street and point out the houses.

Balancing an Egg.

All the world knows how Columbus on a historic occasion made an egg stand on end. After many learned theories had been advanced on balancing the egg he set the egg on end by, of course, smashing down the shell enough to form a base, but the problem is capable of still another solutions. It is an easy matter to set an egg on a plate, for instance, if you know how. The trick is impossible until the eggs has been boiled in an upright position. The position of the hardened yolk at the end of the shell lowers the centre of gravity until the sphere can be spun or even balanced with ease.

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Nov. 16.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 5322 cattle, 3435 hogs, 4167 sheep and lambs and 230 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Choice butchers' were worth $7.50 to $8; good butchers' at $7 to $7.40; medium $6 to $6.75; common at $5 to $6.25; light butchers' heifers at $5.50 to $5.75; choice cows at $6.50 to $6.75; good cows at $6 to $6.25; medium cows at $5.25 to $5.75; canners and cutters at $3.50 to $4.50; bulls at $4.50 to $6.50; and an odd bull of extra quality will sometimes bring $6.75 and $7.

Stockers and Feeders.

Choice heavy feeders, 900 to 1050 lbs., sold at from $6.50 to $6.75; good feeders, 800 to 900 lbs., $6 to $6.25; medium quality steers, $5.25 to $5.50; stockers, $3.50 to $5, according to breeding and color.

Milkers and Springers.

Milkers and springers were selling at steady prices, that is, those of choice quality. Late or backward springers are not wanted. Prices ranged from $50 to $100, the bulk selling at $70 to $85.

Veal Calves.

Choice calves, $9 to $10; good calves, $8 to $9; medium, $6.50 to $7.50; common, $5 to $6, and inferior eastern grass calves at $3 to $4.50.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, ewes, $5 to $5.75; culls and rams at $2.50 to $4; good to choice light lambs at $7.75 to $8; heavy lambs at $6.75 to $7; culls at $5.50 to $6.

Hogs.

Selects fed and watered sold at $7.75 for the bulk, and $8 weighed off cars, and $7.40 f.o.b. cars.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Nov. 16.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, the feature of today's trade was the active demand from packers for canning stock, which was attributed to the fact that some of them during the past few days had made some large sales of canned beef for export account, consequently a brisk trade was done in this class of stock, but as the offerings were smaller than they have been of late the feeling in the market for such was stronger and prices showed an advance of 25c per cwt. with sales of bulls at $5.50 to $5.75, and cows at $3.75 to $4.25 per cwt.

There was no important change in the condition of the market for butchers' cattle, notwithstanding the fact that the supply was small, and good to choice steers scarce. The demand was only fair and principally for small lots to fill actual wants owing to the unsettled weather prevailing. Sales of a few good to choice steers were made at $7 to $7.75, but the bulk of the trading was done in fair stock at $6 to $6.75 per 100 pounds.

Small meats continue firm and the trade in Ontario lambs was active at $7.50 to $7.75, while Quebec stock sold at $7 to $7.25 per 100 pounds. Demand for calves was good at firm prices. A stronger feeling developed in the market for hogs, and prices advanced 40c to 60c per cwt. with a good demand from packers and sales of selected lots were made at $8.40 to $3.60, sows at $6.40 to $6.60, and stags at $4.40 to $4.60 per cwt. weighed off cars.

their poisonous action increased. The conclusion was compelled that the greater the dilution the more dangerous the poisons became, and the only explanation offered was that the resistance of the blood stream was diminished by the water.

This is not the only paradox connected with the action of poisons that has come under investigation at the hands of scientists recently. The venom of the cobra, the most dangerous of all Indian serpents, has always proved more or less of a mystery in view of the fact that if the poison glands are cut out of a newly killed snake of this species their contents may be swallowed with impunity by a healthy human being, the poison being digested in a perfectly natural way, while if the person swallowing the venom happens to have any sore place in his mouth at the time his death is almost instantaneous.

Just why cobra venom can be readily digested, but brings almost instant death when the virus gets directly into the blood stream, is one of the problems now being investigated by scientists.

Another poison whose action is little understood by the medical profession, although it is one of the most useful of all—namely, strychnine, is being similarly investigated. It is used as a stimulant quite generally, up to one thirty-second of a grain being administered with impunity. But if the dose be increased ever so little the dangers of tetanus are very great. When tetanus does follow, however, paradoxical as it may seem, the cure applied is the administration of more strychnine.

Must Have Been Difficult.

A man was brought before the court upon the complaint of his wife, says the Berliner Illustrirte Zeitung. While the prisoner was testifying the judge made it clear that he intended to be harsh with him, so that his wife became frightened, and when called to the stand refused to give any testimony. In fact, she retracted all her accusations.

"So your husband didn't strike you, then?" said the judge. "Where did you get that black eyes?"

"I struck it accidentally on the mantelpiece."

"So! And that piece bitten out of your ear—he didn't do that, either?"

"No, no, your honor. I did that myself!"

Problem of the Prisoned Cork.

It often happens that in attempting to uncork a bottle the stopper is forced into the bottle instead, and it thus floats on the liquid. This would perhaps not be a drawback were it not that each time the bottle is to be emptied the cork comes to the neck and causes an obstruction, preventing the flow of the liquid. This can be avoided very readily and all that is needed is to bend a piece of stiff iron wire in a long U shape, properly fitting it in the neck of the bottle so that the loop portion projects somewhat below the neck. Upon inverting the bottle the wire loop prevents the cork from reaching the neck to obstruct it.

Evolution of a Word.

The word "person" has had an interesting history. Signifying by etymology something to make a sound through, the Latin "persona" began by meaning an actor's mask with its mouthpiece. Then it meant the character represented by the player—"dramatis personae." Then it came to mean the part or character one sustains in real life, and so the "persona ecclesiae," the man who represented the church, became known as a "person" in a special sense and was eventually spelled as "parson." On the other hand, "person" faded away to mean just anybody.

ABOUT CONSUMPTION

Every day, we are receiving letters from users of this medicine telling us of the benefit they have had by its use.

Mrs. Martyn, of 46 Garden Avenue, Toronto, who before taking "Copeland's Cure for Consumption" had been treated by different doctors for several years without benefit, writes to say:

Mr. Copeland: Dear Sir.—After taking several bottles of your Consumption Cure, I would like to make known to others the benefit I derived from its use.

I was very much run down when I commenced taking your medicine, but now I have fully recovered, and in four months have gained 17 pounds. I cannot speak too highly of it, and will be pleased to recommend it to any who enquire as to its merits. You may publish this letter if you wish, and, if so, I trust that it will reach the eyes of some poor sufferers and save them from the dreadful disease of consumption.

Yours respectfully,

CANADA'S DUTY.

By Charles W. Gordon.

I desire to express to my people of the Overseas Dominions with what appreciation and pride I have received the messages from their respective governments..... I shall be strengthened in the discharge of the great responsibilities which rests upon me by the confident belief that in this time of trial the Empire will stand united, calm, resolute, trusting in God.—King George's Message to Canada.

The Motherland is confronting a necessity of national existence. We come to her aid in determination to ensure the safety of this Empire and defend our flag, our honor and our heritage.—Sir Robert L. Borden, Premier Dominion of Canada.

I have often declared that if the Mother Country were ever in danger, or if danger were even threatened, Canada would render assistance to the full extent of her power.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Leader of the Opposition.

There is no place for pessimism on the part of any Britisher in this war. The outcome is assured—we shall win, and win completely. The gage of the German Kaiser and of his Prussian Junkertum, hurled in the teeth of Christian civilization, has been taken up and the fight will go on until Democracy, Liberty and Law among the nations will triumph. But those cheery optimists who foresee a speedy end to this strife, and who picture a joyous jaunt under den Linden for the Allies, can hardly be regarded as harmless lunatics, for harmless they are not. The sooner Canada realizes that this war is a stern serious business and that it will grow in desperation as the long weary months drag their terrible length through winter and perhaps summer and through winter again, the better it will be.

Let us make no mistake. No sudden rage, no fluke of diplomacy, not Austria's greedy ambition leaping at the chance of war afforded by the wicked act of a mad Servian student—not these things nor things like these have caused Germany to plunge into this war. Never did a nation more deliberately take a purposed and long planned step. For forty years Germany has cherished ambitions, has fed upon philosophies, has extended her commerce, has built up her industries, has established her fortresses, has perfected her siege guns, has built her navy, has constructed her aerial fleet, has hoarded her gold, has drilled her eight million soldiers, has fired her young men with lust for the Satanic glory of war with one purpose, and one purpose only—that she might war in a supreme effort after world power, incidental to which is the crushing of France to the position of Portugal among the European nations, the absorption of small countries like Belgium, Holland and Denmark, and the extermination of hated Britain.

Upon this issue Germany stakes her existence, that Europe may be Germanized and a World Empire established greater than the world has ever seen, with colonies on every sea, built upon highly sciened brute force that knows no law but that of might and derides the Christian virtues as contemptible and utterly unworthy of the superman.

For this enterprise the Kaiser believes himself God anointed and God appointed. With him to-day stands the haughty aristocracy of Prussia and the war caste of Germany, and behind them, united in a mad and deluded enthusiasm, stand as yet the German people to a man.

Victory for the Allies, therefore, means the dethronement of the Kaiser and his military brood.

ment, not of 20,000 but of 100,000, 300,000 Canadians available for active service. Then from these enrolment contingents be selected immediate training and sent on to front as soon as they can be equipped and fitted and as they may be needed.

I am no pessimist, but I confess that long, swaying line of men, loel in deadly embrace on the French frontier, is ominous of possible disaster; these daring raids of German submarines are suggestive of danger in a direction we thought inviolate. So far the war has gone well, but all what signifies the loss of a hundred thousand men to Germany out of her eight million soldiers, not the uncalled multitudes available of her sixty-five millions of people. Then there is Italy. A sudden disaster on the line of battle, which by no means outside the fortune of war, a chance and fatal raid upon a fleet, an unforeseen combination of calamities, all of which lie within possibilities in war, might change one week the hue of our horizon. What then? It is the commonplote of war that battles are lost before they are fought. Let Canada wake before it is too late. Regrets are cheap however bitter, are unavailing. I Canada prepare, eagerly, swiftly, to prepare to-day, that in the deadly crisis of the desperate fight, may be able to throw the weight of her young might upon the wavering line of battle and help to hurl the enemy backward in defeat. The first touch may be Canada's. There is place for hysteria, but there is a place for haste. Not a contingent but a whole nation will fulfill Canada's obligation; and not when the cry comes for help but now should the preparation be made.

With a clear conscience and a steadfast heart we can invoke the God, of battles, but the God of Righteousness and Truth to our aid, but after we have made our full preparation; and if by God's good hand our men should not be needed the loss small, but if the day should come when there was desperate need of our men and we were found unready not even God could help us then, which may God forbid.

MOTHERS AND MARRIAGE.

Does the Parent Want Her Daughter Wed and Her Son Single?

Women have the marrying habit men do not. This is not strange, if generations of girls have been taught that every woman should be married and that to remain unwed is a disgrace. Being a "married woman" has been a sort of boast of superiority on the part of wives. Naturally because their mothers and almost every other person of their own sex puts a great deal of emphasis on the desirability of being married at none at all on the desirability, which sometimes exists, of remaining unmarried, girls looked on marriage as the goal of ambition and bent the whole energies to getting husbands.

Rather than endure the unjust stigma of being "old maids" the took the first man who gave them chance. Their object was not love not a husband, but simply to acquire the status, privileges and deference which they had been taught were denied to all of their sex except the "married woman."

Can you imagine anything more disastrous?

Yet this is only half the story. The other half consists in the fact that the very same mothers who fairly drive their daughters to marriage are singularly reluctant to see the the eyes of some poor sufferers and save them from the dreadful disease of consumption.

Yours respectfully,

Letters have been received and are on file from individuals who have suffered from chronic bronchitis for over 30 years and never obtained any permanent benefit until they took this medicine. These letters were written by well-known people and copies will gladly be sent to any person desiring to know what "Copeland's Cure for Consumption" can do for cases of chronic bronchitis.

Those suffering only from weakened lungs and throats to the "down and out" consumptive all testify to the benefit obtained by taking this medicine.

If you are one of these, don't allow another day to pass without getting a bottle to try. It cannot possibly do you harm, but will do you, as it has others, much good.

ATLANTIC OCEAN RECORDS.

Vessels That Won Fame by Reducing the Time of the Trips.

In the early days of Atlantic steam navigation anywhere from ten days to a fortnight was used up between New York and England, and on the eastward voyage it was by no means unusual for some of the sailing packets of Grinnell and Minturn, red, white and blue swallowtail burgee, and of Tommy Tapscott, black ball on burgee and foretopsail, to beat the lumbering sidewheelers.

The first steamer to cut under the ten day voyage was the Persia in 1856, with 9 days, 1 hour and 45 minutes. This remained a record for ten years, until the Scotia in 1866, 8 days, 2 hours and 48 minutes, lopped off a whole day. Three years later the City of Brussels in 1869 established the seven day class, with 7 days, 22 hours and 3 minutes.

It was not until 1882 that the six day boat claimed the record, the Alaska, with 6 days, 18 hours and 37 minutes. The five day class was opened in 1889 by the City of Paris, with 5 days 19 hours 18 minutes. The first of the four day class was the Lusitania in 1908, with 4 days 15 hours. The record is now held by the Mauretania, with a passage in 1910 of 4 days, 10 hours and 21 minutes. New York Sun.

greater than that the world has ever seen, with colonies on every sea, built upon highly scienced brute force that knows no law but that of might and derides the Christian virtues as contemptible and utterly unworthy of the superman.

For this enterprise the Kaiser believes himself God anointed and God appointed. With him to-day stands the haughty aristocracy of Prussia and the war caste of Germany, and behind them, united in a mad and deluded enthusiasm, stand as yet the German people to a man.

Victory for the Allies, therefore, means the dethronement of the Kaiser and his military brood, the annihilation of the war caste and the smashing of the war machine. Nothing short of this will be accepted as 'victory' by any of the allied nations. Nothing less than this would be worth fighting for.

But what does this mean? It means that the Kaiser will hurl into the last deadly fight every German soldier, every German ship and gun and every German dollar; for, while it is true that Germany will survive this war, the Kaiser and his caste of war worshippers will not. They will be wiped out of existence, and they know it. Hence the desperate character of this conflict. There is no truce, nor can be. No peace is possible. Two sets of principles are locked in death grips—Force as an empire builder against the Will of a free people, Justice as an international arbiter as against the Sword of the mighty, international Honor as an eternal obligation rather than as a mere temporary convenience. These things make peace impossible, and these things make the war worth while.

What, then, is Canada's immediate duty? It stands clear as the morning sun above the prairie rim. The Empire stands to-day for Liberty, Justice, Honor among nations as other men; and Canada stands with the Empire for these. It is no longer a question of colony giving support to the motherland. We have gone far past that. It is a question of whether Canada shall stand with the free nations who believe in government by free choice, justice among nations, honor as an eternal obligation, and with her last man and her last dollar fight for these things; that determine a nation's character and its place in history. I repeat that it is no longer a question of aiding the motherland in a fight for national or Empire existence. Canada is herself a nation with a proud sense of nationhood. Canada's future is involved in this conflict, and with every instinct of her national soul and with every throb of her national life she hates and opposes the spirit, the ideals, the methods for which the German Kaiser with his Prussian Junkertum is now so desperately contending.

And how is Canada to fulfil her obligation as a nation in this world crisis? Our Government has done well, has given a splendid exhibition of efficient dispatch in mobilizing, equipping and transporting to England's shores between 30,000 and 40,000 men in the short space of two months. But it is not, I repeat, a matter of contingents one, two, or three. Rather must Canada, with calm, deliberate, clear-eyed purpose, make resolve that she is committed to this conflict to her last man and her last dollar, not for the Empire's sake alone, but for her own sake and the sake of her national ideals. And when once Canada has clearly conceived it as her obligation to throw her entire national life and resources into this conflict, the problem then becomes a very simple one, namely, one of administration.

If it is clearly understood that every fit Canadian man is pledged to this war, then first let the Government take immediate steps for the enrol-whole energies to getting husbands. Rather then endure the stigma of being "old maids" I took the first man who gave the chance. Their object was not to get a husband, but simply to acquire the status, privileges and deference which they had been taught were denied to all of their sex except "married woman."

Can you imagine anything more disastrous?

Yet this is only half the story. The other half consists in the fact that the very same mothers will fairly drive their daughters to marriage singularly reluctant to see their sons wed. The mother who is playing all the arts and craft of chase to entrap some other woman's son for her daughter's husband weep at the announcement that another woman's daughter has shackled her son.

The Eel Mystery.

The life history of the eel is mysterious, but a great deal has been added to our knowledge through recent researches. Its breeding grounds are the mid-Atlantic, at what nobody knows; and while the larval eel remains a year at sea it eats, and grows constantly small in swimming a thousand miles to the mouth of some fresh-water stream.

It then changes from the thinness of a visiting card, and a transparent that permits only its glistening black eyes to be seen, to the pmented snakelike fish that is seen in rivers.

They all die after the first spawning of 15,000,000 or 20,000,000 eggs—nobody knows how. No adults come in from the sea, no adults remain in the streams.

Here, says an authority, is a verbrate animal, emerging from an egg less than one-twenty-fifth of an inch in diameter, growing to a length three inches in perhaps a year, befeted about on the high seas, drifting over a distance of 1,000 miles or more.

Modern Requirements.

The real estate man was showing apartments to the young married pair.

"There are," he said, "seven rooms and two baths; large, spacious kitchen; hot and cold water, southern exposure, elevator service, steam heat, gas, electricity and no charge for janitor's jobs. The price is especially low—only $1,500 a year. We will do the papering necessary, repair floors and ceilings and make any alterations you desire." The young bride turned to her mate.

"James," she said coldly, "it would do at all. The place is simply barbarous. I've studied the plans very carefully, and I don't see one single room where we could take up our rugs and dance!"

"A Sound Box."

Take an ordinary rubber band and stretch it between the thumb and forefinger of your left hand. If you pick it with the fingers of the right hand and let go suddenly it will make a sound which you can hear distinctly enough yourself, but which will not be audible to any one a few feet away. But if you were to fasten it elastic, with a pin at each end, to an empty wooden box, only not so as to touch the wood, and then twang the sound would be much louder than before. The box is the sound box, the sound board, and all stringed instruments have one in some shape or other.

Carriage REPAIRING

We are at it "hammer and tongs" every working day, turning out the best repair work that the Carriage trade can boast of hereabouts. No matter how bad the damage to your conveyance, we can soon put it right for you in a way that will last and give you complete satisfaction. We put into our work energy, experience, and the very best materials, yet we are very moderate in our charges for all kinds of jobs.

ment, not of 20,000 but of 100,000 or 300,000 Canadians available for active service. Then from these enrolled men let contingents be selected for immediate training and sent on to the front as soon as they can be equipped and fitted and as they may be needed.

I am no pessimist, but I confess that that long, swaying line of men, locked in deadly embrace on the French frontier, is ominous of possible disaster; these daring raids of German submarines are suggestive of dangers in a direction we thought invincible. So far the war has gone well, but after all what signifies the loss of a few hundred thousand men to Germany out of her eight million soldiers, not to the uncalled multitudes available out of her sixty-five millions of people? Then there is Italy. A sudden great disaster on the line of battle, which is by no means outside the fortune of war, a chance and fatal raid upon our fleet, an unforeseen combination of calamities, all of which lie within the possibilities in war, might change in one week the hue of our horizon. What then? It is the commonplace of war that battles are lost before they are fought. Let Canada wake before it is too late. Regrets are cheap and however bitter, are unavailing. Let Canada prepare, eagerly, swiftly, surely prepare to-day, that in the last deadly crisis of the desperate fight she may be able to throw the weight of her young might upon the wavering line of battle and help to hurl the enemy backward in defeat. The final touch may be Canada's. There is no place for hysteria, but there is a place or haste. Let a contingent but the whole nation will fulfill Canada's obligation; and not when the cry comes or help but now should the preparation be made.

With a clear conscience and a steadfast heart we can invoke the God, not of battles, but the God of Righteousness and Truth to our aid, but only after we have made our full preparation; and if by God's good hand our men should not be needed the loss is small, but if the day should come when there was desperate need for our men and we were found unready, or even God could help us then. The which may God forbid.

MOTHERS AND MARRIAGE.

Does the Parent Want Her Daughter Wed and Her Son Single?

Women have the marrying habit; men do not. This is not strange, for generations of girls have been taught that every woman should be married and that to remain unwed is a disgrace. Being a "married woman" as been a sort of boast of superiority on the part of wives. Naturally, because their mothers and almost every other person of their own sex puts a great deal of emphasis on the desirability of being married and one at all on the desirability, which sometimes exists, of remaining unmarried, girls looked on marriage as a goal of ambition and bent their whole energies to getting husbands.

Rather than endure the unjust stigma of being "old maids" they took the first man who gave them a glance. Their object was not love, or a husband, but simply to acquire the status, privileges and deference which they had been taught were denied to all of their sex except the married woman.

Can you imagine anything more disastrous?

Rotterdam, Holland, Nov. 17.—Belgium is hungry. Food has begun to flow into the country from England, Canada and the United States, but the American commission for relief in Belgium depends entirely on private charity. The splendid generosity so far shown is as nothing compared to the need.

Something more than 1,000,000 men, woman and children have left home, securing hospitality at the hands of the Dutch, English and French. These will be well taken care of. I heard yesterday that 400,000 Belgian children are to be adopted into Dutch families. During the three months of war there have been no imports whatever and the foodstuffs that had been stored were consumed long ago. The Belgians who remained in Belgium's and at the edge of a gulf; looking into it they can see nothing.

GOVERNMENTS CO-OPERATE.

America must furnish the bulk of the supplies. Several cargoes have already arrived. United States Minister Van Dyke has looked after the transit of the goods through the Netherlands. Germany, over the signature of Baron Von Der Goltz, military governor of Belgium, has promised that these foodstuffs "shall hereafter be exempt from requisition by the military authorities, and shall remain at the disposal of the committee." All shipments are consigned to Mr. Brand Whitlock, American Minister to Belgium, and under whose direction the distribution is being carried out. An example of this co-operation between the Governments came to light recently. At noon, November 9, the freighter, Jan Block arrived from London at Rotterdam, filled with wheat and flour purchased in England. Captain Lucey took charge of the cargo and the Dutch Government did all in its power to render his task easy. Five hundred men were immediately put to work unloading it from the vessel and re-loading it into a special train provided by the Dutch State railway, with co-operation of the German commandant of Liege, whither the cargo was destined. By six o'clock some twenty-one cars were loaded, and about midnight the work was done. At four o'clock on the following morning, November 10, the train left for Liege, drawn by one of the most powerful locomotives in Holland, and arrived at Liege the same night.

7,000,000 PEOPLE TO BE FED.

This is a question, not of feeding the poor, but of feeding an entire population of 7,000,000. Eight per cent. of the people of Belgium are out of work.

America finds itself suddenly bearing the larger part of a burden of $1,000,000 or $5,000,000 a month.

The November deficit has not yet been filled. Fifty thousand tons of foodstuffs were needed for November, and to-day, so far as Captain Lucey knew, there remained 23,000 tons to be provided, and beginning with December, the monthly demand on America will be 80,000 tons.

Capt. Lucey declares that immediate wants have been assuaged in Brussels, Antwerp, Malines, Liege, Charleroi, Verviers, Namur, Mons, Louvain, Dinant, and even Ostend, in the military zone. Within the next three days practically every district will have received some assistance. But what must be distributed must go on continuously until the end of the war.

WHEN TO EAT THE BANANA.

Tropical Natives Never Let the Fruit Ripen on the Tree.

According to Frederick Upham Adams in his book, "The Conquest of the Tropics," there is a popular misunderstanding concerning when the banana is ripe. Mr. Adams asserts:

The banana will never enjoy the popularity it deserves until the people of the temperate zones learn to know when it is ripe and learn not to eat it in its raw state. There is popular delusion that the banana has ripened when it turns from its original green to a golden yellow, and those thus deluded decline to touch this fruit when dark spots appear in the yellow skin of the banana.

The banana is not fully ripe when it is yellow. The change from green to yellow is the first outward appearance of a chemical process incidental to the ripening process. Not until a considerable portion of the skin has turned to a deep brown has this ripening process sufficiently developed to give the fruit its greatest value as a delicious and healthful food.

The natives of the tropics do not permit a banana to ripen on its stem for the good and sufficient reason that such a banana is hardly fit to eat. A chemical process sets in which partially disintegrates the pulp, destroys the fine flavor and renders it insipid and almost tasteless. More than that, the rind cracks when the banana starts to ripen on the plant, and insects burrow in the pulp and thus mar or spoil the fruit. The natives pluck the bunches from the stem at about the same period of their development that the leading importers do, and there is so little difference between an exported banana and one sold in the native markets that even an expert could not be sure which is which.

The same thing is true of most other tropical fruits. As a rule they are picked green by the natives and allowed to ripen artificially. The fecundity of the tropical soil and the forcing powers of the humidity and the sun are so great that most tropical fruits are likely to break their envelopes under the pressure of an accelerated ripening process.

Therefore do not think you are getting the worst of it because the bananas which you eat at home come here green. Nature knows how to grow bananas. Man had to learn how to ripen them.

torcing powers of the humidity and the sun are so great that most tropical fruits are likely to break their envelopes under the pressure of an accelerated ripening process.

Therefore do not think you are getting the worst of it because the bananas which you eat at home come here green. Nature knows how to grow bananas. Man had to learn how to ripen them.

Brown Bulletins.

One of America's original rural editors decided to imitate the city editors who bulletin their news. One morning the local physician reported that Deacon Brown was seriously ill. The deacon was a man of some distinction in the community, so the editor posted a series of bulletins as follows:—

"10 a.m.—Deacon Brown no better."

"11 a.m.—Deacon Brown has relapse."

"12.30 a.m.—Deacon Brown weaker, pulse falling."

"2.15 p.m.—Deacon Brown's family has been summoned."

"3.10 p.m. — Deacon Brown has died and gone to Heaven."

Later in the afternoon a commercial traveler read the reports, and added another:—

"4.10 p.m. — Great excitement in Heaven. Deacon Brown has not yet arrived."

Her One Fear.

A lady and her husband were crossing the Atlantic for the first time. Their steamer encountered terribly rough weather, and they were both very unwell. As they lay in their berths watching the luggage rolling about on the floor of the cabin and listening to the bangs and bumps and the shouted orders on deck, they thought their last hour had come. Suddenly, from his wife's corner, came a feeble voice, just audible above the noise.

"John," she said, "John, do you think the people at home know where our life insurance policies are?"

PLAYING GOLF.

The Game Demands Concentration, Yet Invites Sociability.

"One thing at a time, and that done well," is a very good rule in golf, as in many other lines of either work or play. I speak of this because golf is a game in which the relationship between players is a bit different from what it is in any other game that comes to my mind. It is a game which to reap the best results demands great concentration and yet a game which at times is played wonderfully well by those who seem to be paying scant attention to the task in hand.

The game one moment brings men together and next sends them apart, according to the direction in which they happen to hit the ball. Two men can start from the same tee, be two hundred or more yards apart after their drives and both be on the same green after playing their second shots.

It is a game which invites sociability and yet does not either demand or require it. One man can go out and play all by himself and thoroughly enjoy his game, or two men can go out, play a round together, neither speak a word between the first tee and the last green, yet both go into the clubhouse and declare they had seldom or never spent a more enjoyable time.—Francis Outmet in St. Nicholas.

THE PASSING OF EARL ROBERTS

The death of Lord Roberts at eighty-two brings inexpressible regret rather than sudden shock to the whole British Empire, in every part of which his name has been for two generations a household word. Of him it may truly be said that "Nothing in his life came him like the leaving it; he died one that had been studied in his death throw away the dearest thing he owned, 'twere a careless trifle."

Lord Roberts was in an important use a soldier from the cradle to the grave. He was the son of an East Indian General; he was born in Calcutta, a name afterwards inextricably connected with the very darkest tragedy of the Indian Mutiny; he won high renown and the Victoria Cross as a young officer at the capture of Delhi; thirty years later he played a continuously distinguished part for several years in the Afghan war, which he brought to a triumphant close in 1880 by his amazing march from Kabul to Kandahar; during the next dozen years he filled important military offices in India, including that of Commander-in-chief; from his comparative retirement in Ireland he was suddenly summoned in 1899, with Lord Kitchener as his Chief of Staff, to bring to an end the Boer war in South Africa, and he closed his official life in 1904 after four years of service as Commander-in-chief.

During the past ten years, in sea and out of season, on the floor of the House of Lords and in the columns of British periodicals, he has been proclaiming the doctrine of military training for all classes of the nation, and it is not too much to say that the voice of the nation's savior has not been without effect in enabling it to meet the present fate-crisis so well as it has done. The outbreak of a war of such vast and unprecedented magnitude must have been as amazing and perplexing to him as it has been to every other thoughtful man, for only a shallow man can ever use the expression, "I don't see it." Lord Roberts never pretended to be a prophet; he had no indisputable claim to be regarded as a "seer." History will do him the justice of treating him as far more than "one crying in the wilderness," and for what he has done and said he will ever be regarded with affection and gratitude throughout the Empire he did so much to hold together.

There is something inexpressibly pathetic about the manner and the occasion of Lord Roberts' death. How much the calling in to the fighting line of the Indian troops—Sikhs and Gurkhas—the simple, strong men like those with whom he had spent sixty years of his life, meant to their old military commander and companion-in-arms can never be fully known. One measure of his interest in these hill men is the fact that he faced an inclement season to see them face to face, and if he had been left to choose the way of his departure he would probably have preferred to pass while on such a mission of good feeling. It adds to the public regret that his visit came to such an untimely end.—Toronto Globe.

SKETCH OF HIS CAREER.

The late General Frederik Sleigh Roberts, G.C.B., V.C., Earl of Roberts, was the son of the late Sir Abraham Roberts, G.C.B., and was born in Calcutta, India, in 1832. He entered the army in December, 1851, when he was gazetted a second lieutenant in the Royal Artillery. He was made a first lieutenant in 1857; captain in 1860; brevet major in 1860; major in 1872; brevet lieutenant-colonel in 1868; brevet colonel in 1875; and major-general in 1878. He served through the Indian mutiny of 1857-58, (as deputy assistant quartermaster-general of Royal Artillery) including the siege and capture of Delhi. He was present at many engagements, was frequently wounded, and in several battles had his horse shot under him. He received the Victoria Cross for personal bravery on the field and was thanked by the governor-general of India for his services. He was employed on special service with the expedition of 1863 against the tribes of the Northwest frontier of India. He served in the Abyssinian campaign of 1868 as assistant quartermaster general with the Bengal brigade, and in the same capacity as senior staff officer with the Cachar Column, Looshai expeditionary force in 1871-72. He commanded the Koorum field force from the commencement of the Afghan war in 1878; was present at the storming and capture of the Pluvar Katal and at the pursuit of the Afghan army to the Shurtargardan, also at the affair of the Maugior

Pass and during the operations in Khost, for which he received the thanks of parliament and was made a K.C.B. He commanded the Cabul field force during the march on and occupation of Cabul in 1879, and in 1880 the Cabul-Candahar field force during the celebrated march from Cabul to effect the relief of Candahar, which he accomplished, and subsequently defeated and dispersed the army of Ayoub Khan, for which he received the thanks of parliament. He was made a G.C.B., and created a baronet for his distinguished services in India. He then became commander-in-chief of the Madras army, with the rank of Lieutenant-General.

In December 1899, with Kitchener as his chief of staff Lord Roberts was sent to South Africa to direct the British army against the Boers, and as soon as he took command, the British swept the Boers before them, although the campaign lasted two years.

In 1895 he was appointed field marshal; from 1895-1899, he was commander of the forces in Ireland; from 1901-1904, he was commander-in-chief of the British army. In 1892 he was created a baron, and in 1901 he was created Earl Roberts of Kandahar, Pretoria and Waterford.

He visited Canada in 1908 to attend the Quebec tercentenary. In September he was appointed honorary colonel-in-chief of the Canadian expeditionary force organized to go to the front and it was with great pride that during the past month he viewed the Canadian troops at Salisbury Plains, England. He declared that they were as fine a body of soldiers he had ever commanded.

Whether or not he had a premonition that his end was at hand is a question, but at any rate he yearned to see the Indian troops fighting side by side with the British soldiers in France. It was in India that he was born and lived for years, and he had a deep regard for the dusky warriors who have been so loyal to Britain. His desire was met and he died near the descendants of the men among whom he was born.

The "little red-faced man," as Kipling called him, was publicly proclaimed by the kaiser himself no mean judge, as the "ablest soldier of his time." From William II. he received the decoration of the Red Eagle, being the first non-German to be thus honored, and in explaining his action the kaiser compared him with the ablest military geniuses of the past, and declared him to be the greatest of to-day's generals.

While he was on his wedding tour he was commanded to attend Queen Victoria at Balmoral Castle, and there was given the V. C. The exploit in which this coveted decoration was won occurred in the Indian Mutiny, in the course of a pursuit of a number of rebels, who faced suddenly around, and firing on their pursuers stood at bay. In his book, "Forty-one Years in India," Lord Roberts has given a matter-of-fact account of the deed.

"I saw Younghusband fall," he records, "but I could not go to his assistance as at that moment, one of his sowars was in dire peril from a Sepoy, who was attacking him with his fixed bayonet, and had I not helped the fellow and disposed of his opponent he must have been killed. An instant later I described in the distance two Sepoys making off with a standard, which I determined must be recaptured; so I rode after the rebels and overtook them, and while wrenching the staff out of the hands of one, whom I cut down, the other put his musket close to my body and fired, fortunately for me the piece missed fire. I carried off the standard."

Penelope Pairs.

Pert Penelope Perkins, patently plucking pretty primroses, perceiving Percival Patmore, pretended preoccupation. Percy perspired profusely, penning pensive poetry. Presently, properly primed, Percival promptly proposed. Penelope, prudently pessimistic, playfully procrastinated. Percival, passionately protesting, produced precious presents, promising, pathetically, perpetual protection. Purse-proud, pompous papa, proving pliant, Penelope placidly paired.

Sable Skins.

The costliest sable is the Yakutsk (Russian) skin that runs "silvery"—that has, in other words, a number of equally distributed white or silvery hairs among the soft and silky brown ones. Such skins, of the average size of 15 by 5 inches, are worth $750 apiece. "Topped" sables are dyed ones. They fetch $50 a skin.

Drowsiness.

Drowsiness during the day, if a person has slept well the night before, is often caused by indigestion. Often this is remedied by drinking something very hot, like cocoa or coffee. The brain needs a mild stimulant. Lassitude of the body is not always an indication of illness or laziness.

The Story of Waitstill Baxter

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Copyright, 1913, by Kate Douglas Wiggin

Foxwell Baxter had wholly lost control of himself, and the temper, that had never been governed or held in check, lashed itself into a fury that made him for the moment unaccountable for his words or actions.

"Put down that whip, father, or I'll take it from you."

Waitstill took a step forward in front of Patty. "Put down that whip, father, or I'll take it from you and break it across my knee!" Her eyes blazed and she held her head high. "You've made me do the work of a man, and, thank God, I've got the muscle of one. Don't lift a finger to Patty, or I'll defend her, I promise you! The dinner horn is in the side entry and two blasts will bring Uncle Bart up the hill, but I'd rather not call him unless you force me to."

The Deacon's grasp on the whip relaxed, and he fell back a little in sheer astonishment at the bravado of the girl, ordinarily so quiet and self-contained. He was speechless for a second and then recovered breath enough to shout to the terrified Patty: "I won't use the whip till I hear whether you've got any excuse for your scandalous behavior. Hear me tell you one thing. This little pleasure trip of yours won't do you no good, for I'll break the marriage! I won't have a Wilson in my family if I have to empty a shotgun into him, but your lies and your low

"She can find another up at the Mills as good as he is or better. Off with you, I say, you trumpery little baggage, you!"

"Go, then, dear; it is better so. Uncle Bart will keep you overnight. Run up and get your things;" and Waitstill sank into a chair, realizing the hopelessness of the situation.

"She'll not take anything from my house. It's her husband's business to find her in clothes."

"They'll be better ones than ever you found me," was Patty's response.

No heroics for her; no fainting fits at being disowned; no hysterics at being turned out of house and home; no prayers for mercy, but a quick retort for every gibe from her father, and her defiant attitude enraged the deacon the more.

"I won't speak again," he said, in a tone that could not be mistaken. "Into the street you go with the clothes you stand up in or I'll do what I said I'd do."

"Go, Patty! It's the only thing to be done. Don't tremble, for nobody shall touch a hair of your head. I can trust you to find shelter tonight, and Mark will take care of you tomorrow."

Patty buttoned her shabby coat and tied on her hood as she walked from the kitchen through the sitting room toward the side door, her heart heaving with shame and anger, and above all, with a child's sense of helplessness at being parted from her sister.

"Don't tell the neighbors any more lies than you can help," called her father after her retreating form, "an' if any of 'em dare to come up here an' give me any of their impudence they'll be treated same as you. Come back here, Waitstill, and don't go to slobberin' any goodbyes over her. She ain't likely to get out o' the village for some time if she's expectin' Mark Wilson to take her away."

"I shall certainly go to the door with my sister," said Waitstill coldly, suiting the action to the word, and following Patty out on the steps. "Shall you tell Uncle Bart everything, dear, and ask him to let you sleep at his house?"

Both girls were trembling with excitement. Waitstill, pale as a ghost, Patty flushed and tearful, with defiant eyes and lips that quivered rebelliously.

"I s'pose so," she answered dolefully, "though Aunt Abby hates me, on account of Cephas. I'd rather go to Dr Perry's, but I don't like to meet Phil. There doesn't seem to be any good place for me, but it's only for a night. And you'll not let father prevent your seeing Mark and me tomorrow, will you? Are you afraid to stay alone? I'll sit on the steps all night if you say the word."

"No, no, run along. Father has vented his rage upon you, and I shall not have any more trouble. God bless and keep you, darling. Run along!"

"And you're not angry with me now, Waity? You still love me? And you'll forgive Mark and come to stay with us soon, soon, soon?"

"We'll see, dear, when all this unhappy business is settled, and you are safe and happy in your own home. I shall have much to tell you when we meet tomorrow."

Patty had the most ardent love for her elder sister, and something that resembled reverence for her unselfishness, her loyalty and her strength of character, but if the truth were told, she had no great opinion of Waitstill's ability to feel righteous wrath, nor of her power to avenge herself in the ing well in his elder daughter's books.

CHAPTER XXV.

Waitstill Speaks Her Mind.

THOUGH the two girls had never made any demonstration of their affection in his presence, Deacon Baxter had a fair idea of their mutual dependence upon each other; not that he placed the slightest value on Waitstill's opinion of him or cared in the smallest degree what she or any one else in the universe thought of his conduct, but she certainly did appear to advantage when contrasted with the pert little hussy who had just left the premises; also Waitstill loomed large in his household comforts and economies, having a clear head, a sure hand and being one of the steady going, reliable sort that can be counted on in emergencies, not like Patty, going off at half cock at the smallest provocation. Yes, Waitstill, as a product of his masterly training for the last seven years, had settled down, not without some trouble and friction, into a tolerably dependable pack horse, and he intended in the future to use some care in making permanent so valuable an aid and ally. She did not pursue nor attract the opposite sex, as his younger daughter apparently did; so by continuing his policy of keeping all young men rigidly at a distance he could count confidently on having Waitstill serve his purposes for the next fifteen or twenty years or as long as he himself should continue to ornament and enrich the earth.

He would go to Saco the very next day and cut Patty out of his will, arranging his property so that Waitstill should be the chief legatee as long as she continued to live obediently under his roof. He intended to make the last point clear if he had to consult every lawyer in York county, for he wouldn't take risks on any woman alive. If he must leave his money anywhere—and it was with a bitter pang that he faced the inexorable conviction that he could neither live forever nor take his savings with him to the realms of bliss prepared for members of the orthodox church in good and regular standing—if he must leave his money behind him, he would dig a hole in the ground and bury it rather than let it go to any one who had angered him in his lifetime.

These were the thoughts that caused him to relax his iron grip and smile as he sat by the window smoking his corn-cob pipe and taking one of his very rare periods of rest.

Presently he glanced at the clock. "It's only quarter past 4," he said. "I thought 't was later, but the snow makes it so light you can't fudge the time. The moon falls tonight, don't it? Yes; come to think of it, I know it does. Ain't you settin' out supper a little mite early, Waitstill?"

This was a longer and more amiable speech than he had made in years, but Waitstill never glanced at him as she said: "It is a little early, but I want to get it ready before I leave."

"Be you goin' out? Mind, I won't have you follerin' Patience round. You'll only upset what I've done, an' anyhow I want you to keep away from the neighbors for a few days, till all this blows over."

He spoke firmly, though for him mildly, for he still had the uneasy feeling that he stood on the brink of a volcano, and, as a matter of fact, he tumbled into it the very next moment.

The meager supper was spread—a daughter, having emptied all the vin of his wrath upon the other one an being, in consequence, somewhat enfeebled. It was always easy enough to cope with Patty, for her impertinence evoked such rage that the argument took care of itself, but this young woman was a different matter. There she sat composedly on the edge of her wooden chair, her head lifted high, her color coming and going, her eyes shining steadily like fixed stars there she sat, calmly announcing her intention of leaving her father to shift for himself. Yet the skies seemed to have no thought of falling! He felt that he must make another effort to assert his authority.

"Now, you take off your coat," he said, the pipe in his hand trembling as he stirred nervously in his chair. "You take your coat right off an' set down to the supper table same as usual, do you hear? Eat your victuals an' the go to your bed an' git over this crazy fit that Patience has started workin' in you. No more nonsense now! Do as I tell you!"

"I have made up my mind, father, and it's no use arguing. All who try to live with you fall sooner or later. You have had four children, father."

One boy ran away; the other did no mind being drowned, I fear, since he was so hard at home. You have just turned the third child out for a sin (deceit and disobedience she would never have committed—for her nature is as clear as crystal—if you had ever loved her or considered her happiness. So I have done with you, unless your old age God should bring you such a pass that no one else will come to your assistance; then I'd see somehow that you were cared for and nursed and made comfortable. You are no old man; you are strong and healthy; and you have plenty of money to get a good housekeeper. I should decide differently perhaps if all this were no true."

"You lie! I haven't got plenty of money!" And the deacon struck the table a sudden blow that made the china in the cupboard rattle. "You've no notion what this house costs me an' the food for the stock, an' you two girls, an' labor at the store, an' the hayfield, an' the taxes an' insurance I've slaved from sunrise to sunset, but I ain't hardly been able to lay up a cent. I s'pose the neighbors have been fillin' you full o' tales about my miserable little savin's an' makin' 'em into a fortune. Well, you won't git any o' 'em, I promise you that!"

"You have plenty laid away. Every body knows, so what's the use of denyin' it? Anyway, I don't want a penny of your money, father, so good by. There's enough cooked to keep you for a couple of days," and Waitstill rose from her chair and drew out her mittens.

Father and daughter confronted each other, the secret fury of the man met by the steady determination of the girl. The deacon was baffled, almost awed, by Waitstill's quiet self control but at the very moment that he was half unconsciously glaring at her it dawned upon him that he was beaten, and that she was mistress of the situation.

Where would she go? What were her plans? For definite plans she had or she could not meet his eye with a resolute gaze. If she did leave him how could he contrive to get her back again and so escape the scorn of the village, the averted look, the lessened trade?

girl, ordinarily so quiet and self-contained. Hear me tell you one thing. This little pleasure trip o' yours won't do you no good, for I'll break the marriage! I won't have a Wilson in my family if I have to empty a shotgun into him, but your lies and your low conduct are so beyond reason I can't believe my ears. What's your excuse, I say?"

"Stop a minute, Patty, before you answer, and let me say a few things that ought to have been said before now," interposed Waitstill. "If Patty has done wrong, father, you've no one but yourself to thank for it, and it's only by God's grace that nothing worse has happened to her. What could you expect from a young thing like that, with her merry heart turned into a lump in her breast every day by your cruelty? Did she deceive you? Well, you've made her afraid of you ever since she was a baby in the cradle, drawing the covers over her little head when she heard your step. Whatever crop you sow is bound to come up, father; that's nature's law and God's as well."

"You hold your tongue, you, readin' the law to your elders an' betters," said the old man, choking with wrath. "My business is with this wuthless sister o' yours, not with you! You've got your coat and hood on, miss, so you jest clear out o' the house, an' if you're too slow about it I'll help you along. I've no kind of an idea you're rightly married, for that young Wilson sneak wouldn't pay so high for you as all that. But if it amuses you to call him your husband go an' find him an' stay with him. This is an honest house an' no place for such as you!"

Patty had a good share of the Baxter temper, not under such control as Waitstill's, and the blood mounted into her face.

"You shall not speak to me so!" she said intrepidly, while keeping a discreet eye on the whip. "I'm not a-a caterpillar to be stepped on. I'm a married woman, as right as a New Hampshire justice can make me, with a wedding ring and a certificate to show if need be. And you shall not call my husband names. Time will tell what he is going to be, and that's a son-in-law any true father would be proud to own!"

"Why are you set against this match, father?" argued Waitstill, striving to make him hear reason. "Patty has married into one of the best families in the village. Mark is gay and thoughtless, but never has he been seen the worse for liquor, and never has he done a thing for which a wife need hang her head. It is something for a young fellow of four and twenty to be able to provide for a wife and keep her in comfort, and when all is said and done it is a true love match."

Patty seized this inopportune moment to forget her father's presence and the tragic nature of the occasion and, in her usual impetuous fashion, flung her arms around Waitstill's neck and gave her the bug of a young bear.

"My own dear sister," she said, "I don't mind anything so long as you stand up for us."

"Don't make her go tonight, father," pleaded Waitstill. "Don't send your own child out into the cold. Remember her husband is away from home."

forgive Mark and come to stay with us soon, soon, soon?"

"We'll see, dear, when all this unhappy business is settled, and you are safe and happy in your own home. I shall have much to tell you when we meet tomorrow."

Patty had the most ardent love for her elder sister, and something that resembled reverence for her unselfishness, her loyalty and her strength of character, but if the truth were told, she had no great opinion of Waitstill's ability to feel righteous wrath, nor of her power to avenge herself in the face of rank injustice. It was the conviction of her own superior finesse and audacity that had sustained Patty all through her late escapade. She felt herself a lucky girl, indeed, to achieve liberty and happiness for herself, but doubly lucky if she had chanced to open a way of escape for her more docile and dutiful sister.

She would have been a trifle astonished had she surmised the existence of certain mysterious waves that had been sweeping along the coasts of Waitstill's mind that afternoon, breaking down all sorts of defenses and carrying her will along with them by sheer force, but it is a truism that two human beings can live beside each other for half a century and yet continue strangers.

Patty's elopement with the youth of her choice, taking into account all its attendant risks, was indeed an exhibition of courage and initiative not common to girls of seventeen. But Waitstill was meditating a mutiny more daring yet—a mutiny, too, involving a course of conduct most unusual in maidens of Puritan descent.

She walked back into the kitchen to find her father sitting placidly in the rocking chair by the window. He had lighted his corn-cob pipe, in which he always smoked a mixture of dried sweet fern as being cheaper than tobacco, and his face wore something resembling a smile—a foxy smile—as he watched his youngest born plowing down the hill through the deep snow, while the more obedient Waitstill moved about the room setting supper on the table.

Conversation was not the deacon's forte, but it seemed proper for some one to break the ice that seemed suddenly to be very thick in the immediate vicinity.

"That little Jill-go-over-the-ground will give the neighbors a pleasant evenin' tellin' 'em 'bout me," he chuckled. "Aunt Abby Cole will run the streets o' the three villages by sunup tomorrow. But nobody pays any 'tention to a woman whose tongue is hung in the middle and wags at both ends. I wa'n't intendin' to use the whip on your sister, Waitstill," continued the deacon, with a crafty look at his silent daughter, "though a trouncin' would 'a' done her a sight o' good. But I was only tryin' to frighten her a little mite an' pay her up for bringin' disgrace on us the way she's done, makin' us the talk o' the town. Well, she's gone, an' good riddance to bad rubbish say I! One less mouth to feed an' one less body to clothe. You'll miss her jest at first on account o' there bein' no other women folks on the hill, but 'twon't last long. I'll have Bill Morrill do some o' your outside chores so 't you can take on your sister's work, if she ever done any."

This was a most astoundingly generous proposition on the deacon's part, and, to tell the truth, he did not himself fully understand his mental processes when he made it, but it seemed to be drawn from him by a kind of instinct that he was not stand-

This was a longer and more amiable speech than he had made in years, but Waitstill never glanced at him as she said: "It is a little early, but I want to get it ready before I leave."

"Be you goin' out? Mind, I won't have you follerin' Patience round. You'll only upset what I've done, an' anyhow I want you to keep away from the neighbors for a few days, till all this blows over."

He spoke firmly, though for him mildly, for he still had the uneasy feeling that he stood on the brink of a volcano, and, as a matter of fact, he tumbled into it the very next moment.

The meager supper was spread—a plate of cold soda biscuits, a dried apple pie and the usual brown teapot were in evidence, and as her father ceased speaking Waitstill opened the door of the brick oven where the bean pot reposed, set a chair by the table, and turning, took up her coat (her mother's old riding cloak, it was), and calmly put it on, reaching then for her hood and her squirrel tippet.

"You are goin' out, then, spite o' what I said?" the deacon inquired sternly.

"Did you really think, father, that I would sleep under your roof after you had turned my sister out into the snow to lodge with whoever might take her in—my seventeen-year-old sister that your wife left to my care; my little sister, the very light of my life?"

Waitstill's voice trembled a trifle, but otherwise she was quite calm and free from heroics of any sort.

The deacon looked up in surprise. "I guess you're kind o' hystericky," he said. "Set down—set down an' talk things over. I ain't got nothin' ag'in you, an' I mean to treat you right. Set down."

The old man was decidedly nervous and intended to keep his temper until there was a safer chance to let it fly.

Waitstill sat down. "There's nothing to talk over," she said. "I have done all that I promised my stepmother the night she died, and now I am going. If there's a duty owed between daughter and father it ought to work both ways. I consider that I have done my share, and now I intend to seek happiness for myself. I have never had any, and I am starving for it."

"An' you'd leave me to git on the best I can after what I've done for you?" burst out the deacon, still trying to hold down his growing passion.

"You gave me my life, and I'm thankful to you for that, but you've given me little since, father."

"Hain't I fed an' clothed you?" "No more than I have fed and clothed you. You've provided the raw food, and I've cooked and served it. You've bought cloth, and I have made shirts and overalls and coats for you and knitted your socks and comforters and mittens. Not only have I toiled and saved and scrimped away my girlhood as you bade me, but I've earned for you. Who made the butter and took care of the hens and dried the apples and 'drew in' the rugs? Who raised and ground the peppers for sale and tended the geese that you might sell the feathers? No, father, I don't consider that I'm in your debt!"

Deacon Foxwell Baxter was completely nonplused for the first time in his life. He had never allowed "argyfyin'" in his household, and there had never been a clash of wills before this when he had not come off swiftly and brutally triumphant. This situation was complicated by the fact that he did not dare to apply the brakes as usual since there were more issues involved than ever before. He felt too stunned to deal properly with this by the steady determination of the girl. The deacon was baffled, almost awed, by Waitstill's quiet self-control but at the very moment that he was half unconprehendingly glaring at her it dawned upon him that she was beaten, and that she was mistress of the situation.

Where would she go? What were her plans? For definite plans she had or she could not meet his eye with resolute a gaze. If she did leave him how could he contrive to get her back again and so escape the scorn of the village, the averted look, the lessened trade?

"Where are you goin' now?" he asked, and though he tried his best, he could not for the life of him keep back one final taunt. "I s'pose, like your sister, you've got a man in your eye! He chose this, to him, impossible suggestion as being the most insulting or that he could invent at the moment."

"I have," replied Waitstill, "a man in my eye and in my heart. We should have been husband and wife before this had we not been kept apart by obstacles too stubborn for us to overcome. My way has chanced to open first, though it was none of my contriving."

Had the roof fallen in upon him the deacon could not have been more dumfounded. His tongue literally cloyed to the roof of his mouth. His face fell and his mean, piercing eyes blinked under his shaggy brows as if seeking light.

Waitstill stirred the fire, closed the brick oven and put the teapot on the back of the stove, hung up the long handled dipper on its accustomed nail over the sink and went to the door.

Her father collected his scattered wits and pulled himself to his feet by the arms of the high backed rocker. "You shan't step outside this room till you tell me where you're goin'," he said when he found his voice.

"I have no wish to keep it secret. I am going to see if Mrs. Mason will keep me tonight. Tomorrow I shall walk down the river and get work at the mills, but on my way I shall stop at the Boyntons' to tell Ivory I am ready to marry him as soon as he's ready to take me."

This was enough to stir the blood of the deacon into one last fury. "I might have guessed it if I hadn't daughter, having emptied all the vials of his wrath upon the other one and being, in consequence, somewhat embled. It was always easy enough to cope with Patty, for her impertinence evoked such rage that the argument took care of itself, but this grave young woman was a different matter. Here she sat composedly on the edge of her wooden chair, her head lifted high, her color coming and going, her eyes shining steadily like fixed stars; here she sat, calmly announcing her intention of leaving her father to shift for himself. Yet the skies seemed to have no thought of falling! He felt that he must make another effort to assert his authority.

"Now, you take off your coat," he said, the pipe in his hand trembling as he stirred nervously in his chair. "You take your coat right off an' set down the supper table same as usual, do you hear? Eat your victuals an' then to your bed an' git over this crazy talk that Patience has started workin' you. No more nonsense now! Do I tell you?"

"I have made up my mind, father, and it's no use arguing. All who try to live with you fall sooner or later than have had four children, father.

The boy ran away; the other did not. And being drowned, I fear, since life was so hard at home. You have just turned the third child out for a sin of self and disobedience she would never have committed—for her nature is as clear as crystal—if you had ever loved her or considered her happiness. I have done with you, unless in our old age God should bring you to such a pass that no one else will come to your assistance; then I'd see somehow that you were cared for and nursed and made comfortable. You are not an old man; you are strong and healthy, and you have plenty of money to get good housekeeper. I should decide differently perhaps if all this were not so."

"You lie! I haven't got plenty of money!" And the deacon struck the table a sudden blow that made the china in the cupboard rattle. "You're a notion what this house costs me, the food for the stock, an' you two girls, an' labor at the store, an' the yield, an' the taxes an' insurance! I've slaved from sunrise to sunset, but ain't hardly been able to lay up a cent. I s'pose the neighbors have been lin' you full o' tales about my misdeed little savin's an' makin' 'em into fortune. Well, you won't git any of it, I promise you that!"

"You have plenty laid away. Everybody knows, so what's the use of denying it? Anyway, I don't want a penny of your money, father, so good-bye. There's enough cooked to keep us for a couple of days," and Waitstill rose from her chair and drew on her mittens.

Father and daughter confronted each other, the secret fury of the man met the steady determination of the girl. The deacon was baffled, almost, by Waitstill's quiet self control, but at the very moment that he was about to give up, he was startled by her, dawned upon him that he was beaten, and that she was mistress of the situation.

Where would she go? What were her plans? For definite plans she had, she could not meet his eye with soolute a gaze. If she did leave him, would he contrive to get her back again and so escape the scorn of the village, the averted look, the lessened aid?

been blind as a bat an' deaf as an adder!" And he gave the table another ringing blow before he leaned on it to gather strength. "Of course it would be one o' that crazy Boynton crew you'd take up with!" he roared. "Nothin' would suit either o' you girls but choosin' the biggest enemies I've got in the whole village!"

"You've never taken pains to make anything but enemies, so what could we do?"

"You might as well go to live on the poor farm! Aaron Boynton was a respectable hound, Lois Boynton is as crazy as a loon, the boy is a nobody's child, an' Ivory's no better than a common pauper!"

"Ivory's a brave, strong, honorable man and a scholar too. I can work for him and help him earn and save, as I have you."

"How long's this been goin' on?" The deacon was choking, but he meant to get to the bottom of things while he had the chance.

"It hasn't gone on at all. He has never said a word to me, and I have always obeyed your will in these matters, but you can't hide love any more than you can hide hate. I know Ivory loves me, so I'm going to tell him that my duty is done here and I am ready to help him."

"Goin' to throw yourself at his head, be you?" sneered the deacon. "By the Lord, I don't know where you two girls got these loose ways o' thinkin' an' actin'. Mebbe he won't take you, an' then where'll you be? You won't git under my roof again when you've once left it, you can make up your mind to that!"

"If you have any doubts about Ivory's being willing to take me you'd better drive along behind me and listen while I ask him."

Waitstill's tone had an exultant thrill of certainty in it. She threw up her head, glorying in what she was about to do. If she laid aside her usual reserve and voiced her thoughts openly it was not in the hope of convincing her father, but for the bliss of putting them into words and intoxicating herself by the sound of them.

"Come after me if you will, father, and watch the welcome I shall get. Oh, I have no fear of being turned out by Ivory Boynton. I can hardly wait to give him the joy I shall be bringing! It's selfish to rob him of the chance to speak first, but I'll do it!" And before Deacon Baxter could cross the room Waitstill was out of the kitchen door into the shed and flying down Town House hill like an arrow shot free from the bow.

The deacon followed close behind, hardly knowing why, but he was no match for the girl, and at last he stood helpless on the steps of the shed, shaking his fist and hurling terrible words after her, words that it was fortunate for her peace of mind she could not hear.

"A curse upon you both!" he cried savagely. "Not satisfied with disobeyin' an' defyin' me, you've put me to shame, an' now you'll be settin' the neighbors ag'in me an' ruinin' my trade. If you was freezin' in the snow I wouldn't heave a blanket to you! If you was starvin' I wouldn't fling either of you a crust! Never shall you darken my doors again, an' never shall you git a penny o' my money, not if I have to throw it into the river to spite you!"

Here his breath failed, and he stumbled out into the barn whimpering between his broken sentences like a

"Cause I knew you'd come tonight," said Rodman. "I felt it in my bones. We're going to have a splendid supper."

"Are we? That's good news." Ivory tried to make his tone bright and interested, though his heart was like a lump of lead in his breast. "It's the least I can do for the poor little chap," he thought, "when he stays as caretaker in this lonely spot. I wonder if I hadn't better drive into the barn, Rod, and leave the harness on Nick till I go in and see mother? Guess I will."

"She's hot, Aunt Boynton, hot and restless, but Mrs. Mason thinks that's all."

Ivory found his mother feverish, and her eyes were unnaturally bright, but she was clear in mind and cheerful, too, sitting up in bed to breathe the better, while the Maltese cat snuggled under her arm and purred peacefully.

"The cat is Rod's idea," she said smilingly, but in a very weak voice.

"Drop work a minute and come here, Rod," he said at length. "Can you keep a secret?"

"Course I can! I'm chock full of 'em now, and nobody could dig one of 'em out of me with a pickaxe!"

"Oh, well, if you're full you naturally couldn't hold another!"

"I could try to squeeze it in if it's a nice one," coaxed the boy.

"I don't know whether you'll think it's a nice one, Rod, for it breaks up one of your plans. I'm not sure myself how nice it is, but it's a very big, unexpected, startling one. What do you think—your favorite, Patty, has gone and got married!"

"Patty! Married!" cried Rod, then hastily putting his hand over his mouth to hush his too loud speaking.

"Yes. She and Mark Wilson ran away last Monday, drove over to Alton, N. H., and were married without telling a soul. Deacon Baxter discovered everything this afternoon, like the old fox that he is, and turned Patty out of the house."

"Mean old skinflint!" exclaimed Rod excitedly, all the incipient manhood rising in his ten-year-old breast. "Is she gone to live with the Wilsons?"

ved, by Waitstill's quiet self control, at the very moment that he was all uncomprehendingly glaring at her, dawned upon him that he was beaten, and that she was mistress of the situation.

Where would she go? What were her plans? For definite plans she had, she could not meet his eye with so absolute a gaze. If she did leave him how could he contrive to get her back again and so escape the scorn of the village, the averted look, the lessened ade?

"Where are you goin' now?" he asked, and though he tried his best, he could not for the life of him keep back the final taunt. "I s'pose, like your ster, you've got a man in your eye?" Had the roof fallen in upon him the reason could not have been more unfounded. His tongue literally clove the roof of his mouth. His face fell, and his mean, piercing eyes blinked under his shaggy brows as if seeking light.

Waitstill stirred the fire, closed the tick oven and put the teapot on the tick of the stove, hung up the long undled dipper on its accustomed nail over the sink and went to the door. Her father collected his scattered bits and pulled himself to his feet by the arms of the high backed rocker.

"You shan't step outside this room till you tell me where you're goin'," he said when he found his voice.

Here his breath failed, and he stumbled out into the barn whimpering between his broken sentences like a whipped child.

"Here I am with nobody to milk, nor feed the hens; nobody to churn tomorrow, nor do the chores; a poor, miserable creature, deserted by my children, with nobody to do a hand's turn 'thout bein' paid for every step they take! I'll give 'em what they deserve. I don't know what, but I'll be even with 'em yet." And the deacon set his Baxter jaw in a way that meant his determination to stop at nothing.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Sentry Duty.

IVORY BOYNTON drove home from the woods that same afternoon by way of the bridge, in order to buy some provisions at the brick store. When he was still a long distance from the bars that divided the lane from the highroad he espied a dark clad little speck he knew to be Rodman leaning over the fence, waiting and longing as usual for his homecoming, and his heart warmed at the thought of the boyish welcome that never failed.

The sleigh slipped quickly over the hard packed, shining road, and the bells rang merrily in the clear, cold air, giving out a joyous sound that had no echo in Ivory's breast that day. He had just had a vision of happiness through another man's eyes. Was he always to stand outside the banqueting table, he wondered, and see others feasting while he hungered?

Now the little speck bounded from the fence, flew down the road to meet the sleigh and jumped in by the driver's side.

"I knew you'd come tonight," Rodman cried eagerly. "I told Aunt Boynton you'd come."

"How is she, well as common?" "No, not a bit well since yesterday morning, but Mrs. Mason says it's nothing worse than a cold. Mrs. Mason has just gone home, and we've had a grand housecleaning today. She's washed and ironed and baked, and we've put Aunt Boynton in clean sheets and pillowcases, and her room's nice and warm, and I carried the cat in and put it on her bed to keep her company while I came to watch for you. Aunt Boynton let Mrs. Mason braid her hair and seemed to like her brushing it. It's been dreadful lonesome, and, oh, I am glad you came back, Ivory. Did you find any more spruce gum where you went this time?"

"Pounds and pounds, Rod; enough to bring me in nearly $100. I chanced on the greatest place I've found yet. I followed the wake of an old whirlwind that had left long furrows in the forest—I've told you how the thing works—and I tracked its course by the gum that had formed wherever the trees were wounded. It's hard, lonely work, Rod, but it pays well."

"If I could have been there maybe we could have got more. I'm good at shinning up trees."

"Yes, sometime we'll go gum picking hadn't better drive into the barn, Rod, and leave the harness on Nick till I go in and see mother? Guess I will."

"She's hot, Aunt Boynton, hot and restless, but Mrs. Mason thinks that's all."

Ivory found his mother feverish, and her eyes were unnaturally bright, but she was clear in mind and cheerful, too, sitting up in bed to breathe the better, while the Maltese cat snuggled under her arm and purred peacefully.

"The cat is Rod's idea," she said smilingly, but in a very weak voice. "He is a great nurse. I should never have thought of the cat myself, but she gives me more comfort than all the medicine."

Ivory and Rodman drove up to the supper table, already set in the kitchen, but before Ivory took his seat he softly closed the door that led into the living room. They ate their beans and brown bread and the mince pie that had been the "splendid" feature of the meal, as reported by the boy, and when they had finished and Rodman was clearing the table Ivory walked to the window, lighting his pipe the while, and stood soberly looking out on the snowy landscape. One could scarcely tell it was twilight, with such sweeps of whiteness to catch every gleam of the dying day.

"Patty! Married!" cried Rod, then hastily putting his hand over his mouth to hush his too loud speaking.

"Yes. She and Mark Wilson ran away last Monday, drove over to Allentown, N. H., and were married without telling a soul. Deacon Baxter discovered everything this afternoon, like the old fox that he is, and turned Patty out of the house."

"Mean old skinflint!" exclaimed Rod excitedly, all the incipient manhood rising in his ten-year-old breast. "Is she gone to live with the Wilsons?"

Just to Oblige.

When a certain jurist made his first appearance at the bar as a young lawyer he was given charge by the state solicitor of the prosecution of a man who was accused of some misdemeanor.

Although there was practically no evidence against the man, the youthful attorney did his best, but was astonished when the jury brought in a verdict of "guilty." After the trial one of the jurors tapped the young lawyer on the shoulder. "We didn't think the man was guilty," he explained, "but at the same time didn't like to discourage a young lawyer by acquitting him."

Modernize your Kitchen

One by one the bugbears of housekeeping are being put to rout through the instrumentality of gas. The modern kitchen—which means the all-gas kitchen—is now a recognized part of the up-to-date home. The all-gas kitchen lightens labor. It means a clean, wholesome, sanitary kitchen, as there is no coal dust or ashes to be spread around, and it becomes a real pleasure to work in it. Every housewife desires to cook and heat water in the most economical way, in the quickest, most dependable way, with the least possible work.

The All-Gas way is the solution to the problem.

Scientific Farming*ALFALFA AND FALL PLOWING.

Weeds Must Be Killed Before Plant Will Do Its Best.

Failure to fall plow has been the cause of many unsuccessful attempts to grow alfalfa on the loam and light soils in Wisconsin.

This is the opinion of W. W. Weir of the agricultural experiment station, University of Wisconsin, who has just returned from an inspection trip through the southern part of the state.

"When the alfalfa seed bed is plowed in the spring or shortly before planting, the soil is too loose for good germination."

DOUBTFUL EGGS.

It is good business policy to reject as doubtful all eggs found in a nest that was not visited the previous day. Such eggs should be used in the home kitchen, when they may be broken separately. During the summer the eggs as soon as gathered should be put in the coolest place possible. All cracked and dirty eggs should be used at home. Such eggs are perfectly wholesome if consumed when fresh, but when marketed are discriminated against and are likely to become an entire loss.

RAPE FOR SUMMER PIG FEED.

A Patch Will Furnish a Wealth of Green Fodder.

Sow a patch of rape. It will furnish the growing pigs with a wealth of palatable green feed and, if given a chance to "come back," will produce crop after crop of excellent succulence.

The most satisfactory method of growing this crop for swine, according to James G. Fuller of the agricultural experiment station, University of Wisconsin, is to provide three yards of about equal size and seed them three weeks apart with one and one-fourth bushels of oats and five pounds of rape to the acre. The first lot, of course, is generally sown as soon in the spring as the ground is dry enough to work.

The Dwarf Essex variety is best and usually sown broadcast or in drills twenty-eight inches apart. If in drills, it is best to sow lengthwise of the field, as the animals will not trample down the crop in going from or coming to the feeding yard.

The pigs can be turned on to the first lot as soon as the rape is from fourteen to eighteen inches in height, and as soon as they have eaten it down to four or five leaves to the stock the pigs are transferred to the next patch and so rotated from one lot to the other throughout the summer.

If well supplied with satisfactory forage during the summer months pigs can be finished for market and fattened off quickly as soon as the crop matures.

BLOAT IN CATTLE.

Cause of This Ailment and Method of Treatment.

Bloat is due to indigestion causing fermentation in the paunch of the cow, so the change from dry hay to fresh forage should be made gradually. At first the cattle should be allowed to remain on green feed but a short time, and the usual quantities of dry hay and fodder should be fed before pasturing. It is considered dangerous to turn cattle on rank, green feed when the weather is muggy and the air is moisture laden and charged with electricity.

Equal parts of salt and slaked lime, placed where cattle can have free access to it, is recommended as being likely to reduce the chances of bloat. During the season of danger from bloat it is well to visit the herd at pasture frequently during the day so that instant help may be given.

PRUNING UNFRUITFUL TREES.

Every one has noticed that where trees grow in low, damp, rich soil they continue to make vigorous growth for many years without setting or bearing fruit, while the same kind of tree, of the same age, on a poorer and drier soil, has been bearing crops for years. The fact is that strong growth and heavy fruit bearing cannot occur at the same time.

Summer pruning often checks growth and insures fruit. An old and justifiable saying among fruit growers has been, "Prune when the trees are dormant to promote woody growth, and prune when they are in leaf to check growth and set fruit buds." When a tree is growing too vigorously, without bearing, it is well to prune it back to some extent, grow grass or some other crop around it, fertilize with phosphoric acid and potash, but not with nitrogen, and thus check its growth, but promote its fruiting.—American Cultivator.

FLY PROTECTION FOR STOCK.

Methods For Keeping the Insects Away From Animals.

The problem of protecting live stock, especially milk cows and work animals, from flies is almost continuously before the farmer, says a bulletin of the United States department of agriculture. Most of the repelling substances which might be named are of only temporary value, as with practically all of them the flies begin biting again within a few hours after application. This necessitates considerable expense for the ingredients and the application of the material, and with many substances some ill effects are produced on the host by their continued application. A mixture of fish oil (one gallon), oil of tar (two ounces), oil of pennyroyal (two ounces) and kerosene (half pint) applied lightly to the parts most attacked by the flies will tend to keep them off.

Work animals may be largely protected by placing blankets over their nation and a poor stand often results," said Mr. Weir. "The seed and later the tiny rootlets do not have the proper contact with the soil to sprout and grow well. When fall plowing is practiced, however, this difficulty is overcome, and by planting time the seed bed is properly firmed and in the best condition to promote rapid growth.

"From the standpoint of weed eradication fall plowing is also important to the alfalfa grower. Weeds must be quite thoroughly killed out before alfalfa will do its best and this is more easily accomplished by fall plowing. By disking the field in the spring, when the weed seeds turned under in the fall begin to come up, the farmer can get rid of two or three crops of pests before the alfalfa is seeded. If plowing is not done until spring, these weeds do not come up until about the same time as the alfalfa.

"Farmers who intend to plant alfalfa on acid soil may benefit especially by fall plowing. Such soil must be treated with lime to correct the acidity, and this can be best done in the winter, for then, if the land is plowed, the lime can be hauled directly from the cars and placed on the field."

OCEAN TO FERTILIZE LAND.

Sargasso Sea Full of Essential Conditions of Plant Life.

Students of economics have repeatedly warned that some day the fertility of the earth will be exhausted and the human race perish for lack of food. Attention is being given by constructive thinkers, however, to the problem of finding somewhere an inexhaustible store of fertilizer with which to restore plant food to the soil. According to an article in the Popular Mechanics Magazine, the latest suggestion is that the Sargasso sea, that strange marine meadow of interlaced sea plants covering a vast area in mid-Atlantic between the Antilles, the Azores and Cape Verde, may be made to renew the vitality of the farm lands of all the world. The algae and various other forms of water vegetation which abound in the Sargasso sea are rich in nitrogen, phosphoric acid, potassium and magnesium sulphate, essential constituents of plant life. Besides this, the seaweeds contain sodium, chlorine, iodine and other materials beneficial to certain crops and cellulose in quantities estimated to be greater than those obtainable from the combined forests of Scandinavia, Russia and Canada. All these salts and substances have been washed into the sea from the land.

Seaweed is not an untried fertilizer for farm lands and even when crudely used has proved of value. Gathered along the coast as it is washed ashore, piled in heaps, allowed to rot and then plowed into the soil, it is utilized in many lands. The recent development on a commercial scale of the kelp industry, based on the extraction of potash and iodine from sea plants, has aroused further interest in the fertilizing possibilities of the sea and its products. An insight into these possibilities is given in the yield of potassium. In the case of the Pacific ocean seaweeds each ton of air dried kelp gives up a minimum of 500 pounds of pure potash salts and two pounds of iodine, besides other byproducts.

and fodder should be fed before pasturing. It is considered dangerous to turn cattle on rank, green feed when the weather is muggy and the air is moisture laden and charged with electricity.

Equal parts of salt and slaked lime, placed where cattle can have free access to it, is recommended as being likely to reduce the chances of bloat. During the season of danger from bloat it is well to visit the herd at pasture frequently during the day so that instant help may be given.

Two ounces of turpentine administered in a quart of warm, new milk or in a pint of raw linseed oil, is good for a bloated cow, and if necessary, may be repeated in an hour. When all signs of bloat have disappeared a physic should be given, providing no oil has been previously administered to the cow.—Dr. A. A. Alexander, College of Agriculture, University of Wisconsin.

in diameter than diameter of the foot flange of the well pump should be put around the pump hole and over the well cover. The boss can be applied to a flagstone cap as well as to a cement covering.

Beds of Perennials.

Beds of perennials are becoming more popular every year. Once planted, the perennials take care of themselves pretty much. All that is necessary to grow them to perfection is to keep the weeds down and the soil cultivated, thinning out the plants when they grow too thick. If the seeds of perennials are sown now the plants will get a good start and will winter safely and flower next season. If seeds are not sown until late in the summer the plants will be small and weak when winter arrives, and many will be winter killed.

Many valuable perennials are not generally known. Try adding a few new plants to the hardy border.

Endive an Easy Crop.

For a fall and early winter salad nothing can excel endive, says a contributor to the Farm and Fireside. I have never before appreciated this so fully as I did last year, when we had it on our table almost daily from along in September until in December or January. A hundred plants will furnish a bountiful supply for an average sized family.

Altogether, endive is an easy crop to raise, both for the home grower and the market gardener, and it is usually in good demand in our markets, at fairly remunerative prices.

backs and trousers on their legs. Dairy stock and horses when in barns may be protected by having the barns screened and brushing the flies off with burlap as the animals are driven in. The use of good fly traps in a few of the windows will also aid in the destruction of the flies which endeavor to escape or enter the barn. A fly trap is of simple construction. When large numbers of flies are within a barn the catching of the flies may be facilitated by darkening the windows which are not fitted with traps. A trap is described fully, with illustrations, in the department's farmers' bulletin No. 540, entitled "The Stable Fly," which will be furnished free to those desiring more complete information regarding the pest.

Restoring Fertility.

Fertility may be restored to worn-out land by saving all animal manures and putting them on to the land; by making use of all crop residues—that is, putting back into the soil everything not used for feed; by turning under green manure and catch crops.

CARE OF LIVE STOCK.

A starved, stunted colt makes a hard keeper. The young colt should have a regular ration of grain. Keep him growing. Its first year is an important one, and it should never lose its colt flesh.

A cow hasn't any excuse for getting sick, says Dr. F. S. Schoenleber, state veterinarian at the Kansas Agricultural college. That is, it should not get sick if it has enough wholesome roughage and concentrated feed to eat, clean water to drink—minus the chill—meals served regularly and is housed comfortably.

Wormy, coughing, stunted hogs have been cured and made perfectly healthy by the use of one-fourth to one-half a box of lye to a barrel of soaked corn, shorts or slops. This is the remedy of a Kansas man, and he says it never fails.

In feeding oat straw and corn stover in the morning your sheep will take more exercise looking for more food to satisfy its appetite.

Sheep are the most nervous of animals, and if allowed to run down quickly become the prey of disease. The well kept, well fed sheep is the only kind to keep.

Sheep will not thrive in dark, damp, badly ventilated quarters even if they are only confined in such places overnight. Better keep them in an open lot than house them under such conditions.

A horse can be given from one to two pints of castor oil, sheep about four ounces, pigs two ounces and calves two to four ounces. In case of scours it is best to give small doses, combined with laudanum. Castor oil is an excellent purgative.

The pathetic story of Chief Ojibwe of the Ottawa Indians of ana county, who refused to leave shores of the White river when people were forced north by the invasion, because he hoped that two sons who mysteriously disappeared while lads some day might return to him, was the subject. It was ten in play form by the Chicago scouts and was produced amid original sylvan scenes at the camp.

The story of the old chief was recalled by the finding of skeletons and the remains of a camp in the shifting river bed. It is believed in the locality that the skeletons are those of the missing sons. The camp of the scouts has been named "Camp Ojibwe" in honor of dead chieftain.

Origin of the Cowboy.

A cowboy, to our modern mind means a man who herds cattle. The original "cowboys" instead of herding cattle stole them, says the American Boy. The name seems first have been applied to a band of horsemen, part soldiers and part bandits who fought on the British side during the Revolution. Westchester county, N. Y., was the scene of their operations, and the most of them were Tories. Because they drove away many cattle on their raids they were called cowboys. Opposed to the cowboys their raids through the section of New York which lay between the British and American lines were the Skinners. Like brightest let your range will shine if you mix your lead with turpentine.

If ink you spill, without a doubt, Milk used at once will take it out.

When washing or ironing pray stand on a mat. Your feet will not ache as when standing quite flat.

Some vinegar in your rinse water, you'll find, Will prevent rough, chapped hands in the bitterest wind.

If instead of an iron stand you take a clean brick Your iron, you'll discover, will not cool so quick.

Wet a scorch with cold water and place in the sun. When dry, unless too deep, the mark will have gone.

When making boiled starch put a little salt in. And cover awhile. Then it won't form a skin.

If you butter the edge of a saucepan and cover The contents, though boiling, will never boil over.

Permanganate of potash a filter will clean. Pour through till original pinkness is seen.

Over fish knives and forks, if they still keep the smell, Pour cold tea, let them stand and then polish them well.

If onions you love and they make your breath smell Eat a small sprig of parsley, and all will be well.

When you wash chamol's gloves do not rinse out the soap. Then they will dry soft, and you will not mope.

Have the kiddies split ink on your white tablecloth? Be quick! Melt a candle, take some of the tallow, Spread over the ink and leave it to dry, Then wash it, and see how those ink spots will fly.

ABOUT NEW HATS.

Bewildering Charm and Variety In Fall and Winter Headgear.

Speaking of velvet hats, some of the new ones are bewilderingly beautiful. There is such a variety of shapes this season that every type of feminine beauty can be suited, a fact which is hailed with delight by long suffering womankind, who for years have accepted fashion's weirdest fancies without a disapproving murmur, though they realize that the prevailing styles were far from becoming. There are now styles to suit all faces—young, old, fat, lean, beautiful and even the homely—and in consequence women in general are rejoicing.

For the young, fresh beauty, who has nothing to fear in the way of wrinkles, there are saucy little toques, balanced on one side of the head and ornamented with a weird feather fancy. For the dashing girl who wishes a broad sweep to her hat there are innumerable broad brimmed shapes, which rely on their beauty of line for their decoration.

The little girl here pictured was one of the prize winners, and she attracted much attention from the onlookers. She is dressed as a Dutch milkmaid, with yoke across her neck and pail balanced at the ends. That is the way the Holland milkmaids carry their pails. It is much more comfortable to carry a heavy pail in that manner than in the hands. Hundreds of girls similarly dressed and equipped may be seen any day in Holland.

TORTURED BY CONSTIPATION

"Fruit-a-tives" Cured Paralyzed Bowels and Digestion

ST. BONIFACE DE SHAWINIGAN, QUE. Feb. 3rd. 1914.

"It is a pleasure to me to inform you that after suffering from Chronic Constipation for 2½ years, I have been cured by 'Fruit-a-tives'. While I was a student at Berthier College, I became so ill I was forced to leave the college. Severe pains across the intestines continually tortured me and it came to a point when I could not stoop down at all, and my Digestion became paralyzed. Some one advised me to take 'Fruit-a-tives' and at once I felt a great improvement. After I had taken four or five boxes, I realized that I was completely cured and what made me glad, also, was that they were acting gently, causing no pain whatever to the bowels. All those who suffer with Chronic Constipation should follow my example and take 'Fruit-a-tives' for they are the medicine that cures".

How Absinth Is Made.

An old Moor to whom a trader tried to explain the tyrannous nature of the order forbidding the sale of absinth in Morocco took a wholly unexpected attitude.

"Absinth," he said, "is an invention of the evil one. On its roots he pours the blood of a peacock; then when the leaves begin to grow he sprinkles them with the blood of a monkey; then he dips the stalks in the blood of a bear; lastly he mingles with the juice of the plant the blood of a pig."

"So that when the faithful drinks absinth at the first glass his appetite awakes, and he arises proud as a peacock; at the second glass he becomes excited and gesticulates like a monkey; at the third he becomes quarrelsome and spiteful, like a bear; at the fourth he becomes besotted and falls to the earth and rolls like a hog in the mire."

Italy's Deep Blue Skies.

The sky of Italy is noted for its clearness. The blue is deeper not because the dust there is finer than in the northern countries, but because in the countries of the north, due to the greater coolness of the air, the vapor more readily condenses upon the dust particles. The dust particles thus become larger and consequently not so effective in turning back the blue rays alone, but others are also reflected, and a grayish effect is produced. In a single location the blue of the sky may appear bluer at one time than another. The sky is oftentimes said to be very blue when some white cumulus clouds are outlined against it. The sky is then a deep blue by contrast with the brilliant white. After a shower, when the lower stratum of air is washed of its coarse dust particles, a deeper and purer blue is the result.

CROCHETED BASKETS.

Have you heard the latest in the fancy work world? It is to make "dishes" out of crochet work. You crochet in very simple stitch and with No. 8 or 10 linen thread the "dish." If it is to be a dish shaped like a sherbet glass you make a star for the bottom of it and the rest of simple stitch. Then you dip it in sugar water, such as you would have for boiled dressing, and while wet lay the crochet over a mold, which may be the dish you are copying. When it dries it will look like pierced china. These dishes are used on the table for bonbons and other dry articles of food. The little crocheted baskets illustrated here make fine favors. One of them is trimmed with silk and lace and is intended for the accommodation of a powder puff. The other contains manicure implements or may be converted into use for a sewing basket. When used as favors bonbons may be served in the baskets.

Mixed Diet.
A mixed diet is generally acknowledged to be the best. For the invalid or those in health variety in the dishes prepared should be recognized as being of paramount importance. A few light, easily digested dishes included in the daily menu are always acceptable, while fruit and vegetables galore should be often on the table.

To Keep Her Going.
A long suffering husband had a wife who seemed to be perpetually talking. After driving him almost frantic one evening with her conversation, she remarked: "Thaddeus, I suppose when I die you'll have a mausoleum built in my memory?" Anagram Letters.
Empty the contents of a box of "anagram letters" on a table, so all the letters are in a pile, face downward. The players sit around the table.

The leader begins by turning up one of the letters and saying "Bird." The letter is laid where all can see it, and the first one who responds by giving the name of a bird beginning with that letter is given the card, and it is then his place to turn up another card and call out "bird," "animal," "fish," "famous man" or anything he wishes. Suppose the first letter was E and a player answered it with eagle, the next letter G and "famous man" called, some one would surely say "Grant." The one who has answered the most and acquired the greatest number of letters is the winner.

I can never move through the air, but I am said to fall.

In the Paris Louvre is a famous art collection, valued at $800,000, which was given to the institution by M. Camille Groult. Groult's house on the Avenue Malakoff was so interesting that Alexandre Dumas fils once told the collector that he could not understand why he ever wanted to leave it. "I will tell you," replied M. The Polar Star.
As is well known to most readers, the north star marks the point in the skies toward which the axes (poles) of the earth point. But the poles have another motion called "precession" (much like the secondary motion of a spinning top), by which the ever changing poles describe a big circle in the sky, reaching from the present north star across to Vega. It requires over 25,000 years to complete that circle, and during that time numerous stars will in turn inherit the title of north star. Eleven thousand years hence the job will fall to Vega, and a most worthy holder of that most important position in the skies he will be. When that time comes Polaris will be almost forgotten.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Missionary Anniversary on Sunday in Trinity church. Rev. C. E. Manning will preach.

Rev. C. E. Manning, who preaches in Trinity church on Sunday, is one of the strong men of Methodism.

The Mission Band of Grace church, intend holding a sale and tea in the parsonage on Tuesday, Dec. 1st, afternoon and evening.

Hear Rev. Byron H. Stauffer, Toronto's most popular preacher, on Monday evening, on "The Funny Pennsylvania Dutchman."

The ladies of Trinity Church will hold a sale of useful articles on Friday Dec. 11th. A concert will be given the same evening. Particulars later.

Sunday next is special "Go-to-Church" Sunday, in connection with Grace Church, and the members are aiming at having every member and a thierant present.

Mr. and Mrs. Ham Loucks and family wish to thank their many friends and neighbors, for their kindness during the illness and death of their daughter, Mrs. Leo Harrigan.

"England's Daughter" the latest patriotic war song will be sold in Napanee the week end. The song is being published under the direction of HUBERT GROVES, a well-known Montreal newspaper man. One half of the profit derived from the sales, will be donated to the local Patriotic Fund. This is the song that made such a tremendous hit in Montreal recently.

Mr. John Jennings has issued a writ against the town for $5000. The plaintiff's claim is for damages through the death of his daughter, caused by the negligence of the defendants, their servants, agents and workmen, and for the costs of the action. It will be remembered that a few months ago Mr. Jennings' little child fell into the cistern in the fire hall through a hole in the floor and was drowned.

Joseph Breaugh, aged twenty-seven years, youngest son of Michael Breaugh, of Deseronto, dropped dead of heart failure on Friday, after he had finished shovelling snow around his home. He had been in good health. His sister noticed him fall and rushed to his assistance, but he was then passed human aid. Deceased was a Roman Catholic. The funeral took place on Sunday afternoon to St. Vincent de Paul church, after which the remains were interred in Deseronto cemetery. The young man's mother died a month ago.

"One of the most influential agricultural papers in the Dominion," is the way others refer to the Weekly Sun, of Toronto. It is a paper which appeals to the wide-awake farmers. Independent and fearless, it has always guarded the best interests of Canadian agriculture. Aside from that, its accurate and carefully compiled market reports and summaries give the reader a practical grasp of market conditions. "You have saved me dollars," is the repeated recommendation of hundreds of its readers. The Sun is on the ground, and it is not influenced by any packing houses or commission merchants. It stands for farmers alone, every day in the year. It is the farmers' friend, you ought to be a reader.

Bowen E. Aylesworth who passed away suddenly last week at his home near Bath, was born at Ernestown, Lennox county, January 12th, 1837, the son of David and Nancy Aylesworth. In 1865 he married Elizabeth Ann Miller, daughter of Peter Miller, of Ernestown. He was reeve of the township of Ernestown for two years, and of the village of Bath two years, and was elected in 1897 warden of Lennox and Addington. He unsuccessfully contested Lennox, in the liberal interest, for the legislature at the general election of 1890, but was elected at that in 1898. His election was declared void, but he was re-elected the following year. He was defeated in 1902.

Report No. 6 of the Canadian record of performance for pure bred dairy cattle has recently been issued by the live stock branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture. This report covers the period from March 31st, 1913, to March 31st, 1914, and includes the records of production of milk and butter fat of 120 Ayrshire, 165 Holstein, 30 Jersey, 9 Shorthorn, 2 French Canadian and 2 Guernsey cows, as well as the names and progeny of several Ayrshire, Holstein and Jersey bulls they have qualified, by reason of production of their offspring, for registration. In an appendix to the report will be found the records of a number of cows, which produced sufficient milk and fat to qualify for registration, but failed to freshen within fifteen months after the commencement of the test. The rules and regulations governing the record of performance tests and the standards for registration for the various breeds of dairy cattle are also given. Copies of this report may be had on application to the Publication Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

MR. AND MRS. D. J. HOGAN ENTERTAINED.

Last Tuesday evening the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Fitzpatrick, Thomas St. was the scene of a very pleasant gathering. In their usual kind-hearted and thoughtful manner Mr. and Mrs. Fitzpatrick arranged a reception and entertainment for Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Hogan before leaving for Kingston, where they will reside for the future. A large number of friends were present by invitation to meet Mr. and Mrs. Hogan and greatly appreciated the opportunity given them to express personally their good wishes for their future happiness. Cards were played and music, vocal and instrumental, was well supplied. Towards the close of the evening refreshments were served. In a few well chosen words the Rev. Father O'Connor proposed the health of Mr. and Mrs. Hogan. Having expressed his thanks and gratitude to Mr. and Mrs. Fitzpatrick for the splendid evenings enjoyment and for the privilege the occasion had given him of expressing his appreciation of the worth and the respect he entertained for Mr. and Mrs. Hogan, he was quite within the truth in saying that in their departure Napanee loses a respected, couple and St. Patrick's congregation loyal and devoted members. The Rev. Father felt sure that in their new sphere of life, and among new found friends that both would leave their impress for good, and he finally expressed the hope that the future years of life for Mr. and Mrs. Hogan would be filled with every encouragement and blessed with true happiness and success.

VENTILATION OF FARM BUILDINGS.

Ventilation of farm buildings is the title of a recent bulletin prepared by Mr. J. H. Grisdale, B. Agr., Director of Dominion Experimental Farms, and Mr. E. S. Archibald, B.A., B.S.A.
Dominion Animal Husbandman, and issued as bulletin No. 78 of the regular series of the experimental farm bulletins. This is an illustrated publication of thirty two pages and treats exhaustively of the subject of ventilation.

During the past ten years or more experimental work has been carried on at the experimental farm in farm building ventilation, and the results of these experiments are clearly outlined and from them, recommendations are set forth, and these only after most thorough investigation and repeated trial under every likely condition or handicap. The bulletin is divided into three parts: Part 1 is entitled ventilating the cow barn; part 2, ventilating the horse barn, and part 3, ventilating the piggery.

The Rutherford system of ventilation, which is fully described and illustrated in this bulletin, is now in operation in the barns and stables on all experimental farms and stations from Prince Edward Island to British Columbia. Copies of this bulletin may be obtained on application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

INNOCENT GERMANY.

Through years of peace she dreamed of war, and talked of war when walking; its what she has been planning for, and all her engines making. "The day" has been the German toast, for that day she's been praying, when she might tread the British coast, destroying, burning, slaying. And now the day of war is here, and all the German legions are fighting for their faith—and beer—in haunted corpse-strewn regions. "The day" is come, the day of ire, the toast of every German, and on the page of blood and fire he reads a ghastly sermon. The hate of all the world he's won, the scorn of every nation; his way of "getting the sun" brought woe and tribulation. And now, the war dogs raging loose, his loud voice has a quaver; he offers every lame excuse, to gain the nation's favor. His cry is "Murder!" and
"Police!" from out the struggle faterful; and all he ever wished was peace and he thought warfare hateful. He fought for peace, year after year, and only waved his banner for God and home and lager beer, in quite a seemly manner. His learned professors sign a scroll, of many allegations: "Our Fatherland is in the hole, so hear our explanations!" Explain, professors, plead and swear—we do not care a button! You can't produce a grizzly bear and prove that it's a mutton!

A Queer Animal.

There is a queer animal in Central and South America which is so disguised that when hanging from the branch of a tree it looks for all the world like a part of the tree. It is called the sloth. Its feet are curved and armed with long, powerful, hook-like claws with which it hangs to the branches of trees, generally back downward. It has a green growth upon its back which makes it closely resemble the foliage of the trees. It feeds upon the leaves and fruits and seldom comes down to the ground.
